ADDITIONAL EXEMPTIONS FROM INCOME TAX OF PERSONS IN ACTIVE SERVICE OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide a system of special income-tax exemptions for all men in the armed services, and I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a statement I have prepared briefly explaining the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement by the Senator from New York will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 891) to provide additional exemptions from the income tax for persons in the active service of the Armed Forces of the United States, introduced by Mr. LEHMAN (for himself, Mr. HENDRICKSON, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. MAGNUSON, and Mr. HUMPHREY), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement by Mr. LEHMAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN ON INTRODUCTION OF BILL PROVIDING INCOME-TAX EXEMPTION FOR ALL MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

I am today introducing legislation providing special income-tax relief for all men in the armed services. This measure would eliminate the present system of allowing exemptions only for personnel in combat zones.

Under the formula that I am proposing all enlisted personnel and officers would be allowed a $300 additional personal income-tax exemption and an additional exemption of $100 for each dependent, exclusive of spouse.

While the exemptions provided are sufficiently large so that very few enlisted men will have to pay any income taxes, this bill reestablishes the principle that every American has a responsibility toward support of the Government. Instead of making a broad declaration that enlisted men as a group are wholly exempt from responsibility to support the Government, this bill reaffirms that individual responsibility. At the same time it recognizes that as a practical matter, enlisted men who are making a very special sacrifice for the country, frequently at great personal cost and hardship and for a relatively small amount of pay, are entitled to greater income-tax exemptions than are allowed civilians.

As far as officer personnel is concerned, this measure provides that exemptions for officers with fewer than three dependents would be somewhat lower than was provided in the last war.

The provisions of this legislation would be applicable in the cases of all personnel who serve at least 90 days on active duty or to individuals who are discharged less than 90 days after service because of service-connected disability.

I am aware that special income-tax relief has been granted to personnel in combat zones. However, with the rapid expansion of our Armed Forces and with the even greater expansion that is contemplated, it seems apparent to me that this Congress must alleviate inevitable hardship by extending to all members of the armed services special income-tax relief.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN INEQUITIES IN INCOME-TAX LAWS RELATING TO COOPERATIVE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, the purpose of which is to repeal certain inequities in the income-tax laws as related to cooperative organizations, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill together with an explanatory statement of the bill by me be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 892) to amend the Internal Revenue Code so as to provide special income-tax treatment for cooperative corporations, introduced by Mr. WILLIAMS, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That—

(a) Repeal of exemption of cooperatives from income tax on corporations: Section 101 (12) and (13) of the Internal Revenue Code are repealed.

(b) Imposition of income tax and computation of income—

(1) Technical amendments: Section 4 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new subsection reading as follows:

"(m) Cooperative Corporations—Supplement V."

(2) Taxation of cooperatives: Chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting after section 421 a new supplement reading as follows:

"Supplement V—Cooperative Corporations

"Sec. 431. Tax of cooperative corporations.

"(a) In general.—

"(1) Cooperative corporation: For the purposes of this chapter the term 'cooperative corporation' means a corporation (A) that calls itself a 'cooperative' or 'co-op', or (B) that represents to any persons or classes of persons which deal with it that their patronage will or may entitle them (i) to the payment, either actually or constructively, of patronage dividends, or (ii) to an equity interest in any of the corporation's assets, or (C) that is otherwise operated for the mutual benefit of persons or classes of persons that deal with it; but such term does not include a mutual insurance company or any corporation exempt under section 101.

"(2) Net income: In computing the net income of a cooperative corporation there shall be excluded patronage dividends paid or payable to patrons, but only if—

"(A) The activities of such corporation during the whole of the taxable year did not extend beyond (i) marketing commodities acquired solely from members, and transactions ordinarily and necessarily incident to such marketing, or (ii) selling goods or commodities to, or performing services for, members, and transactions ordinarily and necessarily incident to such sales or services;

"(B) The patronage dividends are paid in money exclusively not later than sixty days after the close of the taxable year, and there are no conditions either precedent or subsequent as to the application or use of such money by the members;

"(C) Such patronage dividends are derived exclusively from marketing commodities acquired from members, or the sale of goods or commodities to, or performance of services for, members, or from transactions ordinarily and necessarily incident to such marketing, sales, or services; and

"(D) Such patronage dividends are paid to each member solely on the basis of the amount of commodities acquired from such member or the amount of goods or commodities sold to, or services performed for, such member, as the case may be; and are not denied to any member because of the limited extent of his transactions, or conditioned upon his retaining or presenting evidence of his transactions.

"(3) Gross receipts: The gross receipts from the sales of goods or services used in computing the gross income of a cooperative corporation shall be determined without the exclusion or subtraction of any patronage dividends, paid or payable to patrons.

"(4) Cost of products bought from producers: In determining the cost to a cooperative corporation of products sold to it by a producer for resale (whether or not in their original form), only amounts, other than patronage dividends, paid or payable to such producer on account of such sales shall be used in computing such cost unless under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, the corporation establishes that the application of this paragraph would more clearly reflect income, in which case the prevailing market price on sales of such products by producers, or the amounts, including patronage dividends, paid or payable in money on account of such sales, whichever is the lesser, shall be used in determining the cost to the corporation of such products so sold to it for resale.

"(5) PATRONAGE DIVIDEND.—For the purposes of this chapter the term 'patronage dividend' means an allocation or a distribution paid or payable (whether or not in money and whether described as a refund, rebate, price adjustment, or payment of a balance due under a marketing agreement) to member patrons or to member and nonmember patrons on some basis related to their sales to or purchases from the corporation during the taxable year, if (A) the allocation or distribution is conditioned (i) upon profits or margins being earned by the corporation from all its operations or a class of its operations during its fiscal year, or (ii) upon income attributable to the resale of the producer's product along with products or a class or classes of products of some other producers less any deductions determination of which is within the discretion of the corporation, or (B) the amount of the allocation or distribution can be determined only with reference to the amount of the profits, margins, or income earned, or (C) the amount of the allocation or distribution can be determined only after declaration or payment of dividends on any class of stock of the corporation or only after the fixing of sums to be transferred to capital, reserves, or surplus.

"(6) Member of cooperative corporation: For the purposes of this chapter, a person shall be considered a member of a cooperative corporation only if such person is entitled to exercise voting rights and meets such requirements for membership as are prescribed by the cooperative."

(c) Information returns required of cooperatives: The Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting between sections 148 and 149 a new section as follows:

"SEC. 148A. Information by cooperatives.

"(a) Payments of patronage dividends, refunds, or rebates: Every association organized and operated as a cooperative shall, when required by the Commissioner, render a correct return, duly verified under oath, of its payments of patronage dividends, rebates, or refunds, stating the name and address of each member in the association, and the amount of payments paid to each member and patron.

"(b) Accumulated earnings and profits: When requested by the Commissioner, every association organized and operated as a cooperative shall forward to him a correct statement of accumulated earnings and profits, including patronage dividends, rebates, or refunds allocated to, but not paid in cash to, members and patrons, and the names and addresses of members and patrons who would be entitled to the same if divided or distributed, and the amounts that would be payable to each."

(d) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments and repeals made by this Act shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1950.

The statement presented by Mr. WILLIAMS is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILLIAMS

This is the same proposal as was presented to the Senate last year on August 25 and to which the Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, on August 31, made the specific promise that this question would receive the consideration of his committee at this session of the Congress.

In introducing this bill I recognize that legislation of this type cannot originate in the Senate. It is my intention to reintroduce this measure as an amendment to the first revenue producing measure which comes to the Senate from the House. I am introducing this in the form of a bill at this time only in order that the Senate Finance Committee might give consideration to this subject in advance.

This is only one of the many loopholes in our existing tax structure and I trust the Senate Finance Committee will at the same time re-examine the tax exemption of the numerous charitable, educational, and religious organizations.

Needless to say, my previous proposal to repeal the present special tax exemptions enjoyed by the President, Vice President, and Members of Congress will also be offered to the first tax bill considered by the Senate.

NUMBER OF TROOPS TO BE SENT TO EUROPE UNDER NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution relating to the number of United States troops to be sent to Europe under the North Atlantic Treaty, and I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) relating to the number of United States troops to be sent to Europe under the North Atlantic Treaty, introduced by Mr. LODGE, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution relative to the number of United States troops to be sent to Europe under the North Atlantic Treaty

Resolved, etc., That the United States Senate and House of Representatives, reaffirming their belief that the central purpose of the Atlantic pact is the prevention of war, reposing special trust and confidence in the ability and integrity of General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower, and recognizing that the major American defense effort should be through the United States Air Force and the United States Navy, herewith approves the sending under present conditions of a limited number of United States troops (as well as other United States Armed Forces) to serve in Europe as a minor fraction of the total armed forces created under the terms of the North Atlantic Treaty: Provided, That—

(1) The Joint Chiefs of Staff certify their decision that each such assignment of United States troops is essential to the security of the United States.

(2) The Joint Chiefs of Staff further certify that the parties to the North Atlantic Treaty have made a definite and dependable commitment that they are giving, and will continue to give full, realistic force and effect to the requirement of article 3 of said treaty that "by means of continuous and effective self-help and mutual aid" they will "maintain and develop their individual and collective capacity to resist armed attack," specifically insofar as the creation of combat units is concerned.

(3) There be hereby established a Joint Congressional Committee on Implementation of the North Atlantic Treaty to consist of nine Senators, five of whom shall be appointed from the majority party and four of whom shall be appointed from the minority party, and nine Representatives, five of whom shall be appointed from the majority party and four of whom shall be appointed from the minority party, said committee to be charged with continuous supervision of all steps taken by the United States in implementation of the North Atlantic Treaty and to receive the certifications by the Joint Chiefs of Staff set forth in subsection (1) and (2) of this resolution. The Senate membership of said joint committee shall be appointed from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and Armed Services and the House membership shall be appointed from the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and Armed Services.

RENEGOTIATION ACT OF 1951—AMENDMENT

Mr. MAYBANK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1724) to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL ITALIAN ALIENS—ADDITIONAL COSPONSOR OF BILL

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 663) to provide for the admission to the United States of an additional number of aliens of Italian nationality, introduced by me on January 25, 1951, be reprinted, and the name of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] be added as a cosponsor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF SERVICEMEN'S READJUSTMENT ACT OF 1944—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 511) to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, to insure proper review of disability status of officers discharged from the armed services, and that it be referred to the Senate Armed Services Committee.

It is the sense of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare that this measure properly comes within the scope and jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXEMPTION FROM CERTAIN CRIMINAL LAWS OF APPOINTED MEMBERS OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 682) to exempt the appointed members of the National Advisory Councils for the National Institutes of Health from certain provisions of the criminal laws and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is the sense of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare that this measure properly comes within the scope and jurisdiction of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROHIBITION OF SHIPMENT OF WAR-USEFUL MATERIALS TO COMMUNIST CHINA AND KOREA

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a concurrent resolution urging our State Department to exert all efforts to persuade allied nations to discontinue shipment of war-useful materials to Communist China and Korea, and I ask that a statement bearing upon this matter be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement by the Senator from Maryland will be printed in the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14), was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas United Nations Armed Forces, among them troops from Great Britain and other United Nations members, as well as land, air, and sea forces of the United States, are engaged in hostilities with, and have suffered great casualties at the hands of, Communist forces of North Korea and China, who are allied with and receiving both moral and material support from Russia; and

Whereas despite this fact many of the nations allied with the United States for the avowed purpose of stopping further Communist aggression are still supplying highly strategic and other much-needed products to these enemy countries, directly or with full knowledge that the shipments ultimately are for delivery to Communist governments, and may well be used to kill or maim members of their own or of their allies, fighting forces; and

Whereas Communist China has been branded by the United Nations as an aggressor in Korea, following urgent demand for such action by the Congress of the United States, with the Senate recorded unanimously on the matter by a 91-to-0 vote: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Congress of the United States declares that it is the sense of this body that such sales and deliveries of strategic or other products that contribute directly or indirectly to the fighting potential of these Communist nations are a threat to the continued security of the United States and other free nations, and should be discontinued as such.

SEC. 2. That the United States Department of State be directed to exhaust every effort to impress upon all such nations that continuance of such trade is contrary to the best interests of the people of this Nation, and is giving aid and comfort to our enemies to the point where its continuance is not only inconsistent with every concept of allied unity and mutual assistance but is indefensible on moral grounds as well.

The statement presented by Mr. O'CONOR is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR

The tension created by present world conditions has led to heavy expenditures by our own Nation as well as by our allied nations in rearmament to prepare for war or to maintain such strength as would discourage other nations from seeking to war on the United States and the Western European countries. Toward this end, the United States has borne by far the heaviest financial burden and for the past few years has provided not only economic aid and military supplies in huge amounts to its allies in Western Europe, but has undertaken, and carried on almost single-handedly for an extended period, the containment of Communist aggression in Korea.

Such rearmament and such resistance to Red aggression is being undermined by the fact that our allies abroad are to some extent continuing to supply the Communist countries with materials which enable them to keep their war machines in operation. The Senate Committee on Export Controls has pointed out that large amounts of strategic supplies have been shipped to China from the United States until as late as December 1950 when, through the efforts of the committee, a stop was put on all shipments to Red China from the United States.

The subcommittee has not hesitated to criticize our own Government and businessmen for participating in and permitting such trade practices, so that if we criticize our western allies, it is not without the knowledge that our own Government and businessmen have likewise been responsible in the past of similar practices. In one respect, we feel that the United States has gone much further than our allies abroad. We have definitely taken a strong position on restrictions of known trade to the Soviet bloc. It is discouraging, however, that our Western European allies have not taken as strong a position, and we find that these Western European nations to whom we are supplying military supplies and economic aid paid by American taxpayers have profited at our expense by selling millions of dollars worth of strategic materials to Russia and her satellites. Included in these sales are such basic war necessities as iron, steel, copper, aluminum, lead, zinc, electrical machinery, rolling stock, rubber products, machinery, scientific and precision instruments. Examination of the trade figures show that in the 9-month period from January to September 1950, the following European countries now allied with the United States against communism, sold strategic goods to Russian satellite countries:

Austria	$27,833,600
Italy	30,990,000
France	14,793,000
Belgium, Luxemburg	16,870,000
Netherlands	11,040,000

These figures also show that during the 6-month period from January to June 1950 the following countries sold strategic goods to the Soviet bloc as follows:

Western Germany	$43,456,000
Sweden	40,155,000
Norway	2,710,000
Denmark	3,994,000

By far the largest European shipper to Russia and the satellite countries, however, has been Great Britain, whose sales of strategic goods for the 12-month period of January 1 to December 31, 1950, totaled $116,474,000. More importantly, the sale of such strategic items to Russia and her satellite countries still continues, and it should be stopped. An illustration of Great Britain's policy of doing business as usual is the fact that the British Government is permitting English businessmen to ship to Red China 10,000 tons of rubber valued at more than $9,800,000. This rubber is now on the high seas, reportedly on two British boats, consigned to Red China. An official of the British Government was quoted as declaring that his country has no intention of stopping this shipment, and it is further reported that the British Government's position was that it will not be stopped because there is no restriction by Great Britain on the export of rubber to any destination.

December export figures for the United Kingdom reveal also that the British are still shipping several strategic items to China in increasing quantities. For instance, in the month of December alone, Great Britain shipped almost as much steel and iron to China as during the entire year of 1949. Iron and steel shipments to China for December amounted to $452,000, as compared with $29,000 in December 1949; and $664,000 for the whole year of 1949, which was more than doubled in 1950 to $1,441,000. Other tabulations which I submit likewise give the total shipments from other allies. It is most difficult to understand how Britain, which has her own troops fighting in Korea alongside of other United Nations troops, is permitting such strategic items to be exported to China at this time.

So menacing to our Nation's security is this continued flow of war's necessities to our enemies that earnest efforts must be renewed to persuade Great Britain particularly, and all other friendly nations as well, that a successful defense to Communist aggression requires united action to deny to our common Communist foes whatever they need or can in any way use to strengthen their armies in the field, or to bolster their home economies.

To this end I am sending to the desk a resolution calling for the State Department to exhaust every effort in this direction.

THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF LITHUANIA'S INDEPENDENCE

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, 3 years ago today I spoke on the floor of the Senate on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of Lithuania's independence.

On that occasion I noted with profound sadness the unhappy events which have led up to that nation's total disappearance behind the implacable shrouds of the iron curtain. I expressed my fervent hope that the day was not too distant when the sunlight of freedom and the blessings of liberty would again be enjoyed by the people of Lithuania. I voiced my concern that the United States seemed to be shutting its eyes to the conditions which persist in that unhappy small nation.

Three years have passed and last Friday marked the thirty-third anniversary of the declaration of independence by the people of Lithuania at Vilna on February 16, 1918. Again there is little cause for rejoicing or celebration. Our loyal Americans of Lithuanian descent, so many of whom fought in World War II to preserve individual dignity and freedom, have every reason to look to the Government of the United States for support and encouragement. They know that in Lithuania men and women are deprived of every possibility to enjoy civil rights, freedom of press, speech, and assembly, the right to express their will in free elections, and their right to worship in accordance with their religious convictions. They can tell better than I can of the mass deportations, the arrests, the quick trials, the reign of terror.

We in this country have rightly joined with other moral peoples in condemning the recent tragic case of Cardinal Mindszenty. But do we realize that in Lithuania there has been a systematic persecution of leading prelates of the church together with their assistants and associates? As a part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point the statement of the Supreme Lithuania Committee of Liberation dated October 15, 1947, contained in its appeal to the United Nations, describing the treatment to which members of the clergy have been subjected under Soviet enslavement.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The wave of arrests has especially affected members of the clergy. On February 19, 1946, V. Borisevicius, bishop of Telsiai, was arrested and sentenced to death. In the middle of December 1946, his auxiliary, Bishop P. Ramanauskas, was arrested and deported. T. Matulionis, bishop of Kaisiadorys, was deported at the same time; he had previously endured Soviet imprisonment for 12 years (1920–32) and had been threatened by the Gestapo with confinement in a concentration camp. Recent persistent reports indicate the arrest and deportation of M. Reinys, archbishop of Vilnius. Thus, at the present time there remains only one bishop in the entire country. Also arrested were the closest assistants of the bishops: Prelates Labukas, Pukys, Olsaukas, and others. That one may appreciate the wide range of arrests in the church, it is enough to mention those in Kaunas alone. Here there are 12 churches. Up to the beginning of 1947, the following Catholic priests of Kaunas had been deported: Canon V. Kieleska, pastor of the Carmelite parish; Rev. J. Dagilis, pastor of Vilijampole parish, Reverend Fabijanskas; Reverend Bubnys, pastor of the Resurrection Church; the Salesian fathers, S. Gustas and B. Paukstys, of the Igulos Church; the prorectors of the priests' seminary, Canon Rauda and Reverend Kuzmickas; the Jesuit Father Biliunas, of the Jesuit Church; Rev. J. Zelvys, of St. Anthony's Church, managed to go into hiding. In the provincial churches, the following were arrested: Reverends Januiaitis, Adomaitis, Ylius, Jonas Grigaitis, Sauklys, Mieldazys, Sliumpa, Vaisnora, Nagulevicius, Giteravicius, Gaizutis, Cimiella; Franciscan fathers Cepulis, Puedziunas, Andraitis, and others—some 70 priests in all. Fearing persecution, about 150 priests have gone into hiding.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, these and other reported acts of incredible brutality are so shocking that it seems wholly inadequate merely to stand aside and refuse recognition to the unjustified annexation of Lithuania and the other Baltic countries. It seems to me that we must do more. We should exhaust every possible means at our disposal to help this brave little nation resume her rightful place among the free and peace-loving countries of the world.

This will take courage, patience, and intelligence. To all Americans who have ties of friendship and family with the people of Lithuania, let me again express my profound hope that a way will be found to restore to that nation the liberty and freedom and prosperity which she deserves. May Lithuania's independence day be a day of true rejoicing.

BROTHERHOOD WEEK—PROCLAMATION OF GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a proclamation issued by the Governor of New York State, Thomas E. Dewey, proclaiming the week of February 18–25 as Brotherhood Week in the Empire State.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROCLAMATION

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany.

It is gratifying to be able to report growing success in one of the most vital endeavors that affect the common good of the people of New York and of the Nation. It is the systematic and well-organized program to bring about better understanding among the different groups, racial and religious, which constitute our population. In this State, government has done its part with the intelligently directed cooperation of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, as well as numerous other civic and benevolent organizations.

One outstanding proof of these efforts is the fact that since the end of hostilities in 1945 no major Nation-wide hate movement has made the slightest progress. This is a fact of which we may all be proud.

Another promising manifestation has been the enrollment of more than 4,000 school teachers who have been trained in the human-relations workshop of the NCCJ. These teachers are at work all over the country, spreading the humane doctrine of mutual understanding.

Intergroup relations manuals, based on 5 years' research, are now being extensively used by teachers all over the country as also are school textbooks which have been effective far and wide in the elimination of bias. There has been a notable decrease in discrimination in employment and in education. Hundreds of seminars have been conducted for leaders of management and labor and also community leaders which are spreading the knowledge of effective methods for overcoming prejudice.

Many businesses are adopting programs for eliminating prejudice among their personnel. This is a result of scientific studies which have proved definitely that prejudice costs money, not small money but big money. One of the Nation's outstanding analysts has collected figures to show that anti-Negro prejudice alone has been costing no less than $4,000,000,000 a year. The total cost of prejudice of all sorts is estimated as amounting to more than twenty billions a year. This is a staggering sum but the facts and figures adduced are convincing.

Obviously, it is now more necessary than ever that our program to eliminate intergroup bias be pursued with vigor and intensity. When the total resources of the Nation are being mobilized for the most important defense effort in our history, unity and mutual understanding are absolutely essential.

It is fitting to call attention to this problem in as public a manner as possible.

Now, therefore, I, Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby proclaim the week of February 18–25 as Brotherhood Week in New York State, and I urge men and women of all groups to cooperate heartily in the celebration of this week and, above all, in its spirit.

Given under my hand and the privy seal of the State at the capitol in the city of Albany this 5th day of February in the year of our Lord 1951.

[SEAL] THOMAS E. DEWEY.

By the Governor:

JAMES C. HAGERTY,
Secretary to the Governor.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY DAY—PROCLAMATION OF GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a proclamation issued by the Governor of New York State, Thomas E. Dewey, proclaiming February 15, 1951, as Susan B. Anthony Day. Her name, linked with the emancipation of women and the success of the women's suffrage movement, deserves far more than ordinary recognition.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROCLAMATION

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany.

Among the great emancipators of our country was a citizen of Rochester, N. Y., of whom the people of the entire State are justly proud. She devoted her life to perhaps the most difficult task ever undertaken by a woman. She had to fight against neglect, indifference, ridicule, and, finally, virulent hostility, but the world today honors the success and qualities of the late Susan B. Anthony.

Her great achievement was to advance liberty and equality one step further along the road to reality in our country. Her main argument was simple and true: That our claim as a nation that believed in equality for all was false so long as half of the people, the women, did not enjoy the same rights, privileges, and responsibilities as men. Her success was a lasting contribution to free government. If ever an American deserved a place in the Hall of Fame, it was Susan B. Anthony. Her name should be remembered for all time.

Now, therefore, I, Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby proclaim February 15, 1951, as Susan B. Anthony Day in New York State and I call upon the people of the entire State to cooperate with the people of Rochester in celebrating this day.

Given under my hand and the privy seal of the State at the capitol in the city of Albany this 7th day of February in the year of our Lord 1951.

[SEAL] THOMAS E. DEWEY.

By the Governor:

JAMES C. HAGERTY,
Secretary to the Governor.

NATIONAL DEFENSE RALLY SPONSORED BY AMERICAN COALITION OF PATRIOTIC AND FRATERNAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there was an important meeting held in New York on Saturday, February 17, to which I wish briefly to direct the attention of the Senate.

It was a national defense rally of outstanding American citizens, sponsored by the American Coalition of Patriotic and Fraternal Organizations. There were some 800 persons present, I am informed on a cold, rainy day. Present were representatives of 89 patriotic and civic organizations, including officers of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Patriotic Order, Sons of America, the Junior Order United American Mechanics, and others equally old and prominent in our American life.

The distinguished senior Senator from Maryland was one of the speakers on this occasion, along with a former member of this body, the Honorable Albert W. Hawkes.

It has been stated that there is a great debate taking place in the Congress and over the country regarding the foreign policy of the United States. I have taken some part in this debate. But I should like to commend to your attention for its cogency, its thoughtfulness, and its incisiveness the resolution adopted at this meeting in New York. I hope it will be read and studied.

This very excellent resolution, adopted unanimously at this meeting, reads as follows:

As representatives of 89 patriotic organizations in convention assembled:

We pledge to the Congress of the United States our support in the exercise of its constitutional authority to determine when and where American troops shall be garrisoned in foreign lands.

We urge the President and the Congress to avoid commitments abroad of our military and economic resources which may weaken the defense of our own hemisphere, or jeopardize the independent action of our own Government.

We further urge that the President and the Congress, in the exercise of their separate constitutional functions, exact from our allies adequate military guaranties to avoid another Korea in which American troops are called upon to do most of the fighting and dying.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE IN FORESTRY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ELLENDER

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, on February 16, before the Southern Forestry Conference, at Savannah, Ga., I delivered an address on the subject Private Enterprise in Forestry.

In the course of my remarks, I discussed several of the important issues which precipitated the so-called Great Debate. I ask unanimous consent to have the full text of my address printed in the body of the RECORD, following my remarks.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I am delighted to address the 1951 Southern Forestry Conference sponsored by the Forest Farmers Association. Your association has been of great assistance to the committees of the Congress in helping us to enact our most recent forestry legislation, with which many of you are familiar.

When your efficient executive secretary, Paul Schoen, advised me that the theme of this conference would be Private Enterprise in Forestry, I was well pleased. The continuance of our private enterprise in all of its phases should be one of keenest interest to all Americans. Through that system, our country has become the most powerful and the most productive nation on the face of the globe. We are by far, the best clothed, the best fed, the best housed, the best medicated, and in addition to all these blessings, the least governed people on earth. We have reached those heights because our people have been nurtured in an atmosphere of freedom, where their minds have remained unshackled and where our great system of private enterprise has been permitted to flourish unbounded.

Today we find ourselves the envy of a troubled world. Some countries are seeking our advice, our help, and our cooperation. But there are others—one in particular—which seek to destroy our way of life, and in fact, to put the whole world in darkness. America must meet that challenge. We care not what form of government a country lives under, provided it is chosen freely by its people, but we shall and must draw the line when a country seeks, by force, to impose its own form of government on all others. We have fought two world wars to preserve and protect our freedom, and by the eternals, we shall fight another rather than be reduced to slavery. This is not a challenge, but a solemn warning.

We are a peace loving people. I hope and pray that we may yet succeed in our quest for peace. We desire most fervently the good will and the friendship of all nations. We enthusiastically joined the United Nations organization, in the hope that it would provide an avenue for peace. I believe that our representatives in that organization have worked diligently in search of a formula that would bring about world peace, but at every turn, Russia and her satellites have interposed objections.

United Nations forces, composed chiefly of our own soldiers, are engaged in a conflict that will result in the making or the breaking of the United Nations organization as an instrumentality for peace. Some of our statesmen challenge the right of the Organization to assist and protect the South Koreans in their fight for independence. Rightly or wrongly, the promise was made in apparent good faith, and now that we are so engaged, we must make every effort to see it through.

The Korean struggle, in my opinion, is a blessing in disguise, so far as our country is concerned, for it has pointed out, very sharply, the inadequacy of our preparedness program. It has afforded our military leaders the opportunity to arrive at many new concepts of warfare that may be indispensable to our survival, should our real foe decide to wage all-out war. It has demonstrated that air power alone cannot win battles, but that the foot soldier must be ever present to seal a victory on the battlefield. Last, but not least, it has given hope to many of the countries of the world that they can expect help and protection, if and when attacked by Communist aggressors.

The entry of China into the Korea war has multiplied our problems in the Far East. The action of the United Nations in branding China as an aggressor, though belated, will strengthen our position. The UN should have acted long ago. Many of our allies stalled for time in the hope of reaching a peaceful settlement with the Chinese. But all that is now water under the bridge, and the next step is to tighten our blockade of China. Our allies must be made to realize that we cannot in any way appease China in order to preserve economic relationships between them and the Chinese Communist government. It is better to sacrifice trade now than to lose all of it, and perhaps our way of life as well, in the future. We must call a spade a spade, and not remain at war with China, and at the same time permit our allies to ship war supplies and goods to the Chinese Reds.

For the past month the Senate has been engaged in the so-called great debate. Many Republicans have been severely criticizing our foreign policy, even to the point of charging that we should have never engaged in the defense of South Korean independence. As I recall, when we first entered the conflict, there was little or no criticism, but, on the contrary, the choice to make a stand in Korea was praised far and wide as a most courageous act on the part of the President. But then when our forces met reverses, which were more or less to be expected, our armchair strategists began to pour it on, and they have been pouring it on ever since.

Some of the President's critics argue that he should not be permitted to send our troops abroad without the consent of Congress. Every schoolboy knows that our Presidents, from Jefferson on down to the present time, have exercised that right in the protection of our country's interests. As our Commander in Chief, why should the President not have that power? Surely no one will seriously contend that he would intervene solely through caprice or to further his own designs. In setting up the checks and balances that our forefathers so wisely incorporated into our system of government, the founders of our country provided that the executive and the legislative branches need not take orders one from the other.

If Congress is not in agreement with the President's policies as Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces, it may withhold its appropriations, and in so doing, effectively reduce the size of our forces, but I am of the firm belief that Congress should not be empowered to direct military strategy, particularly the deployment of troops. There is much to be said for the persuasive influence that Congress can exert when a majority of its Members feels that the situation calls for action or a change, but this must be kept as persuasive action and not as direct control.

Other critics contend that Congress should limit the number of soldiers that we send to Western Europe. I have faith in our military leadership. Marshall, Eisenhower, Bradley, Collins, Sherman, Vandenberg, and a score of others, who led our forces to victory in World War II, are still at the helm. I am confident that the people of America have faith in them and I know that the President makes no momentous decisions affecting military strategy without consulting them, and doubtless follows their advice. To say that the President is reckless and should not be trusted in this crisis, stamps a black mark, and is a reflection on, our military leadership. But that is the way of politics. Issues must be created, no matter how underhanded, no matter how dastard, for the 1952 elections.

In giving aid to our friends across the seas, we must in turn receive assurances of a willingness on their part to fight for and to protect their own freedom; there must be an all-out effort on their part to harness all their resources to the end that their armed forces are well and adequately supplied; and they must also provide for adequate taxation of all their citizens to help pay for the common defense. General Eisenhower has assured us that he will see to it that those conditions are met, and I trust in his judgment and leadership.

No, ladies and gentlemen; we cannot afford to retire into a shell, snaillike, and wait for lightning to strike, which in essence is the plan being advocated by some, including former President Hoover. We must be prepared to meet successfully the greatest menace that has ever threatened our way of life. Force is the only language that the men in the Kremlin can understand. In order to block Russia in whatever aggressive move she may make, we must be in a position to strike back. We must convince the Soviets that we mean business, that we will not take orders, and that we will fight for what we believe to be right and just. In my opinion, by following such a course we may prevent them from throwing the world into a most cruel and devastating conflict.

Russia must and should be warned now, in no uncertain language, to refrain from again inciting any of her satellites to engage in aggression. She should be told that an aggressive move on the part of any satellite will be considered an example of Russian aggression, that an attack by them will be construed as an attack by her, and that, in either event, she can expect all-out war to the finish.

And so, before discussing private enterprise in forestry, I thought it desirable to discuss with you some of the problems facing America in the choice of a course we should follow in order to preserve our over-all private-enterprise system.

As a preface to my remarks on private enterprise in forestry, I should like to remind you that the United States does not have a corner on the market in world problems, not even on problems involving agriculture and forestry. Recently I visited some of the ancient countries of the Middle East and saw the condition of their lands and their forests. We must never let our natural resources be dissipated as have some of these countries.

In Persia I saw the ruins of ancient civilizations—the ruins of nations whose rulers professed to have all the answers. There, where the twin rivers—the Tigris and Euphrates—once brought wealth and power to the people who farmed and built their cities, there now are only silt-choked canals and desolation. It is estimated that this valley known as Mesopotamia once supported a population of some twenty-five or thirty millions. Now a scant three million eke out a meager existence. The whole of ancient Persia at one time could support 105,000,000 according to some historians, today a bare 15,000,000 can exist.

This desolation has resulted from one thing—neglect. Neglect of the God-given natural resources of a country can lead only to ruin. The peoples of antiquity thought that they could bleed their soils and their forests without heed to replacement, to flood and erosion control, and to reforestation. Where now are the Cedars of Lebanon?

The advocates of economy in the Congress are determined to cut back governmental expenditures to the bone, except those funds earmarked for the mobilization program. With this I am in complete accord, for we cannot afford to prepare for war and at the same time support a full quota of peacetime activities. But I should like to make one thing clear—I shall insist in the Senate that when the ax of economy falls, that appropriations relating to the preservation of our natural resources be trimmed last, and I hope not at all. It has always been my contention that the money our Government spends in preserving, maintaining, and building up its natural resources is not only a wise investment, but an absolute necessity. In flood control, in irrigation, in power projects, in forestry, we have seen our Federal dollars not only returned in principal but returned with interest. I want to emphasize—our Government does not lose money on sound programs designed to conserve our natural resources. But, most important of all, if we are to advance and continue to make progress we must have ample natural resources to work with.

In any consideration of private enterprise, in forestry or elsewhere, we must first define the limitations of its antithesis, which in this case is our Federal Government. What should be the role of the Federal Government in American forestry?

Our Government needs the wholehearted cooperation of the American forestry industry, and, conversely, the forestry industry needs some assistance and help from the Government. Of that I am completely convinced. The question is "How much government do we want in private forestry?" or as I would rather put it "How much government can American private forestry get along without?" I do not think any of us here would welcome a return to the old days when our vast woodland resources were plundered and devastated by injudicious cutting, and no thought was given to planning for the future. And I am even more certain that no one here anticipated with pleasure a day when the Government will regulate your industry. It is between these two extremes that we must chart our course to obtain the greatest benefit from our natural forest resources and to best utilize our forest products.

In these perilous times, I need not mention to you the importance of forestry and the forest industries in our mobilizing economy. The United States has become the greatest consumer of wood in the world. Wood is a basic and an indispensable element in the daily lives of our people. While some uses for wood decline, new uses are continually being found for it.

The timber products industries are an important element in the support of many communities, both large and small. The Nation needs ample, dependable timber supplies to sustain and expand the supply of consumer goods and the industry and employment that are based on wood. Furthermore, as dramatically demonstrated by World War II, an ample timber supply is a vital aspect of national security. Beyond these considerations is the world shortage of softwood timber. If our large potential forest resources are developed properly, this country can, without depriving our own population, help to meet world timber needs in years to come, and so contribute to international well-being.

Of only slightly lesser importance is the increasing demand for pulpwood. Over the past 40 years, pulpwood consumption has been expanding rapidly. Consumption of paper and paperboard may well reach 30,000,000 tons in the next decade, without counting any increases that may result from the Korean campaign.

To supply its expanding needs for wood, our country must adopt scientific forest management to an extent as never before. Forestry is not a new science. Scientific forest management existed already in France and Germany at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and crude prescriptions as to the proper use of forests even date back to the fourteenth century. In Germany, the first courses for education in forestry were organized between 1770 and 1780 at the Universities of Liepzig, Jena, Giessen, and Berlin. In France, the first forest institute was opened in 1824 at Nancy.

In America, we have come a long way, in point of time, in forest conservation, but we have not progressed far enough. When the white man first began to settle this country, the timber stand amounted to at least 8,000,000,000,000 board feet. This enormous volume was very largely in virgin timber, centuries old. We now have about 1,600,000,000,000 board feet, only about half of which is virgin timber. In the course of 300 years, and chiefly during the last century, we have used or destroyed most of our original timber heritage plus much of what has grown in the meantime. The time is long past when timber could be regarded as an inexhaustible reserve, to be drawn on without regard for its replacement. It must now be regarded as a crop, much as the cotton and sugar cane and corn that we see about us in the South.

The South has been the victim of some of the worst ravagers of our forest-lands. I have seen the devastated areas with my own eyes. Thousands of acres of virgin timber have been completely denuded, leaving behind only black, charred stumps as a reminder of the wealth that used to be.

Forestry is a long time undertaking. While the country's annual cut may vary somewhat with the play of economic forces, the annual rate of growth is unchanging, relatively speaking, from one year to the next. Once the forest resources of America have deteriorated, as they have already done, it requires years of effort and additional investments to increase substantially the volume of cut that can be sustained. It is therefore important to set up long-range goals or objectives of forest growth as a basis for sound public policy and action. The Forest Service believes that we should aim at a growth of 18 to 20 billion cubic feet of lumber annually, which should produce 65 to 72 billion board feet of saw timber of good species and quality.

There is no question but that the Government can and in many cases does, perform valuable and necessary services to the forest landowners and forest products operators. Their sensible and restrained continuance can mean better forestry practices and more productive forests in the United States, more prosperous business for you, and an advancement of our Nation's general welfare.

Your Representatives who attended the many House and Senate hearings will tell you that we should be proud of the results we obtained in forestry legislation during the Eighty-first Congress. They will tell you that it was not at all easy, that there were many hearings and very many difficulties encountered before we could claim success. In fact, in 1949 we failed to obtain one of the four of our objectives for forestry legislation. Because of the confusion and difficulties encountered it was determined wise to accept only three of these objectives, namely, protection, planting, and education, and to wait until the following year, 1950, to obtain assistance in technical services. As a result of your efforts and those of some Senators and some members of the House, we now have what I believe is suitable legislation so that we can go ahead with vision to develop our private forest resources. I say we have at present satisfactory forestry laws but with full knowledge that more than legislation is needed. Congress must appropriate the money necessary for those cooperative endeavors. Also, the States and the private landowners must do their part. I believe you can count on all three—the Congress, the States, and the private landowners to prove that we were right in choosing the cooperative approach.

Now, what about the future of private enterprise in forestry? That is, indeed, a good question. Even in normal times, predicting future events is a little out of my line. And with the threat of war facing us, and an expanding economy geared for possible world conflict, the task of guessing the shifting winds of congressional intent becomes even more difficult. The international situation will surely continue to affect your business. You will have less help, fewer machines, perhaps eventually less money for forestry and conservation activities. Wood will become less plentiful, and saw timber will become hard to harvest and expensive to process. But it will be easy to sell; make no mistake about that.

Senator ANDERSON, of New Mexico, who expressed his regret to me that he was not able to be with us here today, introduced a bill in the Eighty-first Congress that I believe of extreme importance to the forest industry and in particular to our conference today on private enterprise in forestry. It represents, I might say, a viewpoint far removed from what I assume to be that held by most of you.

The title of the Anderson bill is: "A bill to provide for the establishment of forest practices for the conservation of and proper use of privately owned forest lands, and for other purposes." Insofar as I am concerned, the title sets the stage for the details that follow. The bill declares it to be the policy of the Congress to establish forestry practices on privately owned lands. With one sweeping program, it removes from private owners the administration of their forest lands, interposing instead the Federal Government.

I believe this bill may represent the shape of things to come, unless we remain constantly on guard to combat it, and unless we seek to cure the evils that give rise to such a method of procedure for maintaining our forests. Over the past decade or more, our Nation has moved toward, not away from, increased Government control. Some of this regulation has been on the whole beneficial to our country. I cannot subscribe to the idea that any measure of benefit to the people as a whole is per se evil and socialistic, but I am convinced that the trend is present, and that we have been allowing more and more of our daily lives to be regulated by Government edict rather than by the ebb and flow of free enterprise. No better example to me can be found than the recent controversy over the tidelands, those littoral areas off our coasts containing oil and other minerals. If the tidelands discussion had come up 25 years ago, the States would have unquestionably prevailed and remained in possession of what I still rightfully believe to be theirs.

And if you remember, one of the arguments for Federal ownership and control of the tidelands was that because petroleum is usually in interstate commerce and is always essential for the national defense, therefore the Federal Government should have control over offshore petroleum resources. Likewise, the advocates of Federal control fought, and through a Presidential veto succeeded in killing, the Kerr natural-gas bill, which would have insured continued control of our natural-gas resources by the States.

It is high time, ladies and gentlemen, that something drastic is done to arrest the inroads of bureaucratic control. As I intimated a few moments ago, with a national emergency confronting our country, centralization of power in the National Government will continue to expand. We, every one of us, must fight against it. The tendency of an apprehensive people, fearful of war, is to rely upon a strong centralized Government, with the end result that our States' rights, and our people's rights, will wither away, or be chipped off, piece by piece, by the proponent of bureaucracy.

I feel that in time of national stress the Government must direct our Nation's efforts, but what I must caution you against is the insidious creeping of bureaucracy into our daily lives. And once it is in, under the guise of national emergency, or any other reason, it is here to stay, if I may judge by our past history.

The arguments of the advocates of regulation by government order, or whatever you want to call it, are cogent indeed. The planners have big dreams. The big dreams are beautiful on paper. It is usually only after they are here, and often here to stay, that we realize how insidious they are, how stifling for our system of free enterprise, our basic freedoms, even of our fundamental democratic form of government. These are reasons why I am opposed to it. The lure of big government has appeal for the people who think that they are going to get something for nothing. It is usually too late when they realize that instead of getting something for nothing, they have paid and paid with some of the dearest things America still possesses, paid with "liberty and freedom."

I do not believe that there is any immediate danger of socialization of forestry industries, even to the extent provided by the Anderson bill, for shortly before coming down here I spoke with Senator ANDERSON'S office and was told that he did not intend to reintroduce the bill—in the first session at least—of the Eighty-second Congress. I am not an alarmist, I hope, but if I serve no other purpose here than to awaken you to the dangers creeping up on private enterprise in forestry, then I shall feel that my time and yours was not wasted this evening.

The best way to combat the encroachment of government control into your business is for you, yourselves, to accomplish the objectives that the bureaucrats would achieve by public control of private forestry. Let me urge you, therefore, to set about putting your house in order. If you can do the job, you can present the best, the most solid, the most irrefutable argument to those who would sell free enterprise down the river. By doing the job, I mean putting into practice the measures that will conserve and expand our forest resources. If the Government can do it, then private enterprise can do it better. What is more, the Government, under present laws, will help you do it, and will help the States to help you do it.

And what should be done now? You must put into effect sound replanting practices, intelligent selective cutting programs, watershed management surveys and plans, fire control systems, flood-control facilities through reforestation, and in general halt the decline in our national timber stand. These and many more things are what you can do to forestall the encroachment of government control over your business. Those of you gathered here tonight cannot do it alone, but your organization and organizations similar to yours can be a prime factor in keeping the "free" in free enterprise forestry. Much improvement in forestry conservation is needed in the South, and from what I have learned, your group and other leaders in southern forestry have taken giant steps in the right direction. But, I repeat, much remains to be done. I promise that I shall work as hard as I am able, as a Senator and as chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to keep private enterprise the motivating power in American forestry. I feel, as I begin my fifteenth year in the Senate, that under our present forestry laws our Government can help you with the task of keeping forestry healthy and profitable, but I feel just as strongly that there should be no strings on the help and assistance, and that aid and technical know-how from our Federal Government should encourage rather than discourage private enterprise. A government, or an industry, or a people, that comes to depend upon the crutch of a paternalistic power, is sick. If we are to survive in a free world—if we are to preserve our cherished way of life—we, you and I, and all Americans, must unite in our efforts to keep American private enterprise healthy and strong both for now and for unborn generations.

NOMINATION OF JOHN C. WILLIAMS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think there is at the desk the favorable report of the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of John C. Williams, of South Carolina, to be United States attorney for the western district of South Carolina. I should like to have the Senate act on the nomination at this time because of the fact that court is held in that district beginning one day this week, and the present district attorney is disabled and has resigned and is out of office.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination by the Senate, as in executive session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the nomination received the unanimous approval of the committee?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes; it is unanimously approved by the Judiciary Committee. I request action on the nomination at this time simply in order to expedite the handling of the business of the court in South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination, as in executive session?

There being no objection, as in executive session, the nomination was considered and confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

RENEGOTIATION ACT OF 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1724) to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless the Senator from Georgia wishes to address the Senate at this time, the first amendment of the committee will be read.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to make a preliminary statement which I think may shorten the consideration of the bill.

This bill is intended to prevent exorbitant and unconscionable costs from being charged to the Government in the case of materials, supplies, or equipment purchased for the national defense. Enactment of the bill at this time is deemed necessary because the country has again embarked upon a vast program of military expenditures. In many cases contractors will be asked to deliver materials, supplies, or equipment for the defense program without being given sufficient time to prepare adequate cost estimates. Some items called for will be different from those ordinarily produced in the manufacturing plant of the contractor or subcontractor. Other items may be entirely new, with no cost history. Because the Government will purchase materials, supplies, and equipment in large quantities, the prevailing market price of a great many of the items in question, even if known, will still be an inadequate measure of a fair price.

I cannot emphasize too strongly, Mr. President, that the power given to administrative officials under this bill to renegotiate realized profits on these contracts or related subcontracts amounts almost to a delegation to administrative officials of the power to tax, which, in my opinion, would have no justification except in time of war or of a national emergency. Perhaps it is well to bear in mind that Mr. Maurice Karker, first Chairman of the War Department Price Adjustment Board during World War II, called the World War II statute imposing such a power "a dangerous and un-American statute."

While the World War II Renegotiation Act was upheld by the Supreme Court, the Court was careful to point out that—the very finality of the administrative determinations here upheld emphasize the seriousness of the injustices which can result from the abuse of the large powers vested in the administrative officials.

In testimony before the Finance Committee it developed that renegotiation may have some defects which could become serious if the act is not clearly, impartially, intelligently, and equitably administered. It is, therefore, highly important that men with knowledge, vision, and practical business accounting and professional experience be selected to carry out the functions of this bill.

Because renegotiation will amount to the equivalent of a tax of 100 percent on profits determined by the administrator to be excessive, it may have a serious effect upon incentives to produce efficiently unless full and adequate allowance is made for efficient use of facilities, materials, and manpower. The renegotiation process must be simple and not cumbersome or time consuming, lest it interfere seriously with the work of producing the materials, equipment, and supplies necessary for the national defense. This last problem becomes much more serious if renegotiation is extended to too low a level. If the small contractor or subcontractor is required to spend a great deal of time in discussing renegotiation problems, instead of carrying on production, the Government's stockpile of materials, supplies, and equipment is bound to suffer. It is for this reason that I believe the renegotiation power should be surrounded by a great many safeguards. I hope that when sufficient procurement experience has been gained in the pricing of defense items, it will be possible to restrict to a minimum the renegotiation function.

The bill gives the Renegotiation Board discretionary authority to exempt from renegotiation any contract or subcontract where, in the opinion of the Board, the provisions of the contract or subcontract are otherwise adequate to prevent excessive profits. I believe that the Board should not hesitate to use this power. In the final analysis, it is largely through careful and proper procurement that firm and reasonable prices can be established.

The House bill has surrounded the renegotiation procedure with certain safeguards and the Finance Committee bill has provided still further safeguards in an effort to prevent arbitrary and unreasonable determinations. In arriving at excessive profits under the bill, no recognition is given to the fact that a substantial part of the excessive profits will be captured through the Federal income tax, and the excess-profits tax which has been recently adopted. I, for one, would like to see excessive profits arrived at after taking into account the payment of Federal income and excess-profits taxes. However, it was not possible under this bill to prepare a satisfactory amendment to accomplish that purpose. And the services insist that renegotiation after Federal income and excess-profits taxes will materially increase Government costs in securing materials for defense purposes.

I shall now discuss briefly the important features of the committee bill, distinguishing the changes made by the Finance Committee from the provisions of the House bill.

This act will be administered by an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government composed of five members, appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which shall be known as the Renegotiation Board. The chairman of the Board is to be appointed by the President and receive compensation in the amount of $17,500 per annum. The other four members are to be appointed one each by the respective Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Defense, and one by the Administrator of General Services. These four members shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum.

This differs from the House bill which provides for all five members to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and for compensation of $12,500 a year each.

Under the House bill, a contractor or subcontractor may be renegotiated where he has received or accrued, within the fiscal year, more than $100,000 in the aggregate from renegotiable contracts and subcontracts. The Senate Finance Committee raised this renegotiable minimum limitation from $100,000 to $500,000. During World War II, the minimum amount was also originally set at $100,000, but was later increased to $500,000. I recall that at that time both the Truman committee and the services recommended that the $100,000 limit be increased to $500,000.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the statement just made by the Senator from Georgia. If he will yield for a question, did he say a moment ago that the Truman committee set a limit of $500,000?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. That is not on one contract, though, let me say. It is for all contracts obtained by the contractor within a fiscal year. If they aggregate less than $500,000, they are not renegotiable.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. During consideration of the World War II legislation, it was shown that while the work load with a $100,000 limit would be approximately five times greater than the work load with a $500,000 limit, the additional recoveries from the lower $100,000 limit would still be small. This is also true today. Furthermore, a low limit of $100,000 will prevent the renegotiators from concentrating on the larger cases involving a greater amount of dollars. The higher limit of $500,000 will permit the small-business man with defense contracts or related subcontracts to spend his time more effectively in the production of defense materials. Of course, any excessive profits which may arise from the aggregate receipts and accruals of less than $500,000 received by the contractor or subcontractor during the fiscal year will not be large in any event and will also be substantially reduced through the excess-profits taxes and income taxes.

Another important change was made by the committee with respect to the agricultural exemption provided for in the House bill. Under the House bill, and the Senate Finance Committee amendment, an exemption is granted for an agricultural commodity in its raw or natural state. If the agricultural commodity is not customarily sold or does not have an established market in such state, then the exemption applies in the first form or state in which it is customarily sold or has an established market. The term "agricultural product" is broad enough to include not only products resulting from the cultivation of the soil but also natural resins, saps, gums of trees, animals, fish, and the produce of livestock, such as wool, eggs, milk, and cream. One difficulty with the House bill is that it confines the agricultural exemption to contracts or subcontracts with the producers of the agricultural commodity. The Finance Committee substitutes for the House exemption the exemption provided for in the World War II law. That law granted the exemption not only to contracts or subcontracts with the producer of the agricultural commodity but also to contracts or subcontracts with the person acquiring such product. Testimony before the Finance Committee indicated that the House bill would work considerable hardship. If a factor or merchant who handled and sold the agricultural products in their raw or natural state is subject to renegotiation he would pay the farmer less for his product. For example, a cotton merchant who buys raw cotton to sell to a cotton textile manufacturer would probably pay to the farmer a much lower price for his cotton if he were subject to renegotiation.

Any contract or subcontract for the product of a mine, oil, or gas well, or other mineral or natural deposit or timber, which has not been processed, refined, or treated beyond the first form or state suitable for industrial use is also exempt from renegotiation under the bill as amended by the Senate Finance Committee. An illustration of this exemption is that it would apply to contracts or subcontracts for the sale of pig iron, which is the first form or state of iron ore suitable for industrial use. Similarly, certain byproducts resulting from processing designed to produce an exempted product are also exempt from renegotiation. For example, natural gasoline is a byproduct resulting from the processing of natural gas and would, therefore, not be subject to renegotiation since it falls within the purview of the raw materials exemption contained in section 106 (a) (3).

This exemption is broader than that provided in the House, which limited the exemption to the product of the producer and made the exempted state of the material the same as that at which percentage depletion is allowed.

The Board is required to prescribe regulations which will give an integrated producer a cost allowance substantially equivalent to the amount which would have been realized by such a contractor or subcontractor if he had sold his product at the last exempted form or state. This places the integrated producer who either acquires any of the agricultural commodities or raw materials or produces them initially and then processes them up to and beyond the last exempted form or state on a parity with a producer who sells at the last exempted form or state.

Another provision which was in effect during World War II exempted from renegotiation the profits realized by a contractor or subcontractor by reason of the increment in value of his excess inventory of the agricultural products described herein or the products of a mine, oil, or gas well, or other mineral or natural deposit or timber.

The omission of this exemption by the House subjected to renegotiation an inventory profit which is not a manufacturing profit. Under the bill as passed by the House, a contractor or subcontractor who had on hand agricultural products or other raw material in excess of his contract needs which inventory had increased in value will be penalized if he processes such material beyond an exempt state and uses such products to fulfill Government contracts instead of going out in the market and purchasing new products at current prices to fulfill such contracts. The Finance Committee restored the World War II exemption. The following example will show how the Finance Committee amendment operates:

A has, through the purchase of long cotton, 600,000 pounds of cotton on hand on a particular date, which has a book cost of 30 cents a pound. On this date A has future orders which will consume only 100,000 pounds of such cotton. A thus has a long position of 500,000 pounds of cotton. The next contract that A takes is for Government goods and requires the use of 500,000 pounds of such cotton. On the day A takes the Government contract the current market price of such cotton is 35 cents a pound. In such a situation, A has placed himself in a position to realize an inventory profit of $25,000. This inventory profit, if realized, is not a manufacturing profit, but is in the nature of an investment or speculative profit which could be realized. It has no relationship to the profits to be derived from the Government contract, and therefore represents a profit from an excess inventory, which is excluded from renegotiation under the amendment.

The Finance Committee also added an amendment providing for a mandatory exemption in the case of contracts or subcontracts entered into with charitable, educational, scientific institutions, and so forth, exempt from taxation on their income from their related activities. The exemption applies only where the income from the contract or subcontract does not constitute unrelated business income for Federal income tax purposes. The bill as passed by the House did not provide for such an exemption. It is the opinion of the Finance Committee that such an exemption will be particularly beneficial in the case of contracts or subcontracts entered into with educational institutions to conduct research activities.

Another Finance Committee amendment provided for an expressed exemption from renegotiation in the case of contracts and subcontracts with common carriers or public utilities. This exemption was felt advisable because the vendor in such cases is subject to regulation by a public body. The exemption also applies to him if unregulated where he does not charge rates higher than these regulated rates. The bill as passed by the House did not contain any such exemption.

A new provision which your committee has added to the bill concerns long-lived industrial equipment, such as machinery, tools, and so forth. Some of my colleagues may recall that a provision dealing specially with this type of equipment was voted by this body in January of 1944 for incorporation in the renegotiation statute in effect during World War II. That provision was eliminated in conference, but the peculiarities of this type of equipment have now been reconsidered by the committee, and the conclusion has been reached that some limited protection is appropriate for manufacturers of such equipment.

When such equipment is sold directly to the Government, or to a contractor for the account of the Government, the sale is comparable to the sale of any other product entering into defense production. The Government pays the price and gets the equipment, and it is appropriate in such circumstances that the transaction should be subject in its entirety to renegotiation.

Where, however, the equipment is not sold to or for the account of the Government, but is sold to a contractor or subcontractor who uses it on Government work, a different situation prevails. Most productive equipment is used up only partly on Government work. The remainder of its useful life is devoted, in most cases both concurrently and subsequently, to private commercial production of its owner. The committee considers it only fair, then, that only that portion of the price paid for such equipment which corresponds to its defense use should be subject to renegotiation.

Of course, the extent of such use is never ascertainable in advance. The Finance Committee has determined, therefore, to solve this problem by making a flat and arbitrary assumption that productive equipment delivered to defense contractors or subcontractors will be used exclusively on defense work for the first 5 years and that the balance of its service life will be exhausted in commercial production. This allocation appears to be fair to the Government and the manufacturers alike, and also permits the application of a satisfactory working rule.

The rule we propose is that only that fraction of the amounts realized from the sale of durable productive equipment shall be subject to renegotiation which 5 years constitutes of the average useful life of such equipment. In other words, if the item has a 10-year life, one-half of the price paid therefor will be subject to renegotiation; if it has a 15-year life, one-third; and so forth. Bulletin F issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in 1932 prescribes the average useful life of most items of productive equipment. When it does not, the Board will apply its own estimate. The bill so provides.

The bill as passed by the House makes subject to renegotiation all of the moneys received or accrued by a contractor and related subcontractor on or after January 1, 1951, and attributable to performance on or after July 1, 1950, where the contracts are with the Departments of Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Commerce, the General Services Administration, and the Atomic Energy Commission. The Finance Committee added to the list specifically named the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was covered under the World War II law, and the Finance Committee is of the opinion that it should be covered under the pending bill, since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's synthetic rubber, tin, and abaca operations are within the areas of contracts for defense materials which are proper subjects for renegotiation.

I may say, Mr. President, that the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] has offered an amendment relating to this matter, which the committee will be glad to accept at the proper time.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. My intention in offering the amendment was to include the public housing authorities also in the renegotiation provision. I believe that if we renegotiate contracts of everybody who has any business with the Government, those in the business of housing should also be included in the renegotiation provision, and I thank the Senator for what he has said about accepting the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. The Finance Committee thoroughly agrees with the position taken by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. I notice that by an amendment the committee proposes to include the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I was wondering whether it would also be necessary this time to mention the Panama Canal, in view of the language in section 102 which makes the title applicable to departments specifically named.

In explanation of my question, let me say that as the author of the amendment to the sixth supplemental defense bill of 1942 in the House of Representatives, which instituted the policy of renegotiation, I was recently called before a court here in the city of Washington to testify in a case in which the Government was seeking to recover from a contractor who had a contract for constructing the third set of locks on the Panama Canal.

The Senator from Georgia will recall that construction of the third set of locks on the Canal was started, but was later suspended during World War II. The contractor in the pending case has been contending that the Panama Canal was not covered by the language in the original act which named the Secretary of War and the War Department, and so argues that he was not subject to the renegotiation law. Within the past few weeks, as I have said, I was called in to testify on the intent of the coverage in the original renegotiation act, so far as the Panama Canal was concerned.

I might say, in this connection, that it was my thought that the Panama Canal was covered, since the Governor operated under the then Secretary of War. We did not name the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the original act, but did bring it in by an amendment which I offered to a subsequent appropriation bill. But I raise the question here so that a similar doubt might not arise in the future.

I am not certain whether any reorganization has been concluded which would bring the Canal Zone under any agency of the Government. If not, and if we are to specifically name the agencies which are to be covered by the pending bill, we ought to include the Canal Zone, so as to prevent any such contingency arising in the future.

Mr. GEORGE. I think there is much merit in the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota. However, I think a provision in the bill does cover the specific question.

Mr. CASE. On page 2, lines 12 to 14, the bill states:

> The provisions of this title shall be applicable (1) to all contracts with the departments specifically named in section 103 (a).

The Canal Zone is not specifically named. Whether it comes under a department by virtue of a reorganization act, I do not know. It is not necessary to name the Maritime Commission, for example, because it was brought under the Department of Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. It is in the Department of Commerce. I think the Canal Zone has been brought under a department, too, although I am not certain on that point. I should like to invite the Senator's attention to the further provision that the President himself is given the authority to add to the list contained in the bill any department which exercises functions in connection with the national defense.

Mr. CASE. Apparently the President could make such designation.

Mr. GEORGE. The President could make the designation. I believe the Canal Zone has been brought under a department by a reorganization act. I believe it has been brought within the application of the proposed act. I am not certain of that fact, however. As I stated, I am not certain on that point.

Mr. CASE. I am under that impression also. I would suggest, therefore, that before consideration of the bill is completed, we should check into the subject. In the instance to which I referred the defense of the contractor was that the Canal Zone had not been named.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have already called attention to the fact that, in addition to the departments specifically named in the bill, the President is given the power to add other agencies and departments. He may add agencies or departments which exercise functions in connection with the national defense.

The Finance Committee is of the opinion that this power of the President should be confined to naming those additional departments exercising functions having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense. While a literal wording of the bill may require all contracts with the departments specifically named, or those designated by the President, to be renegotiated, the Finance Committee contemplates that the Renegotiation Board by a judicious use of its power to make permissive exemptions of contracts by classes or types will properly limit the area of renegotiation where contracts are not intimately related to the defense effort.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator from North Dakota is curious to know whether in renegotiating contracts the amount which is paid to a so-called 5-percenter can be deducted?

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand, the contract would be renegotiable if he were paid within the fiscal year more than $25,000 for his fees and commissions in connection with the renegotiable contracts. I believe such a provision is contained in the bill.

Mr. LANGER. Can the Senator point to the provision which deals with such 5-percent commissions?

Mr GEORGE I shall read from the report. In the meantime, I shall try to locate the provision in the bill I read from page 3 of the report:

> Your committee bill continues the $25,000 limit contained in the House bill in the case of subcontractors whose income is derived from commissions and fees based upon renegotiation contracts and subcontracts.

That is to say, if the fees received exceed $25,000 within a fiscal year, the fees are to be renegotiated by the board. The Senator will find the provision on page 26, at line 21, of the bill. It is contained in subsection 2.

Mr. LANGER. If a contract extends over a period of 5 years, a 5-percenter can be paid $25,000 each year. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. The bill refers to the aggregate amount of the contract. That is what makes the contract renegotiable. It is the aggregate amount actually paid or approved. When the total fees runs above $25,000 for a fiscal year, the fee is subject to renegotiation.

Mr. LANGER. Why should any citizen of this country who wants a subcontract be allowed to pay 5 percent to another person, and deduct the 5 percent fee at the time his contract with the Government is renegotiated? Why cannot the Government advertise and get subcontracts without making it necessary for a contractor to pay someone else 5 percent?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, there is a great deal of merit in what the Senator from North Dakota suggests. Under the income tax laws a contractor or subcontractor, or any taxpayer, may claim what he considers in good faith to be a reasonable expense in carrying on his business. If the taxing authorities agree with him, he can deduct the fee in computing his own taxable income.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator from Georgia believe that such a provision would be an open invitation to persons with influence to sell their influence in order to get a 5-percent fee?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I think not. I think it would be a discouragement, because all the facts revealed in the investigation showed, as the Senator will recall, that some of the 5 percenters got exorbitantly large sums of money. The provision in the pending bill would place a limitation on such practice. The fees would become renegotiable if in the aggregate for the fiscal year they ran above $25,000.

Mr. LANGER. Therefore a subcontractor could get as much as $25,000, if a contract ran as long as 5 years, without his subcontract being subject to renegotiation.

Mr. GEORGE. He could not get $25,000 on a particular contract. He could only be exempt if his total fees and commissions ran above $25,000 within a fiscal year. I believe it is a restrictive measure, which has worked very well. While there ought to be some way of advising a contractor or subcontractor about contracts to be let, as the Senator points out, so that businessmen would not have to pay any unnecessary sum of money, probably good businessmen find it convenient, advisable, and a reasonable business practice to engage engineers, and others with special knowledge, in order to negotiate certain contracts for them.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that what he is saying may be perfectly sound. However, I do not believe the subject should be dealt with in a renegotiation bill. If it is sought to prohibit such practice, it should be done in a measure dealing with the general subject of Government contracts. In this bill we are not trying to say what is legal and what is not legal. We say that when a man makes too much money we will renegotiate and see to it that he gets only the reasonable value of his work or contract. The subcommittee headed by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] is investigating the subject, and he may have something to report on the subject. I do not think a renegotiation bill is the place in which to try to legislate the legality of various kinds of contracts.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I may say that I was very much impressed by the splendid work which was done by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY]. I think he did a very fine job. However, I believe the language of the bill on page 27, lines 5 to 11, is very indefinite. It says:

> If the aggregate of such amounts received or accrued during the fiscal year under such subcontracts—

What is there to prevent a person from making a contract and getting $25,000 during the first year, $25,000 during the next year, and spreading out his fees over a period of years?

Mr. GEORGE. This is a limitation upon the fees and commissions of the person rendering services for the contractor or subcontractor. He cannot escape renegotiation if the sum total which he receives from such fees exceeds $25,000.

Mr. LANGER. I still do not see how that prevents a commission man from going to a man who wants a contract and saying to him, "You are going to get a 5-year contract. You are going to pay me $25,000 in 1951, $25,000 in 1952, $25,000 in 1953, and so forth." I think that is the kind of thing that ought to be stopped, and it seems to me this language will not stop it.

Mr. GEORGE. It does not undertake to stop or prevent or outlaw a particular contract. What it says to the contractor or subcontractor is, "When your expenditures for this item exceed $25,000, it is subject to renegotiation, and the reasonableness of the expenditures will be looked into by the board."

If a particular contractor were to have only one contract with the Government, and if he were to be paid over a period of time, he could make his contract; but if the amount paid out or the amount accrued under the contract reached $25,000 in the fiscal year, that would be all that he could deduct, unless the board itself found his expenditures to be reasonable.

Mr. LANGER. Under this wording, could he not get $25,000 the succeeding year, $25,000 the year after that, and so forth?

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean the contractor?

Mr. LANGER. I mean the commission man, who gets the 5 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; he could do it if he were not paid a total of $25,000 within the fiscal year. In any event the transactions would be subject to Federal income and excess-profits taxes.

Mr. LANGER. On page 37, line 7, I notice that appointments of officers and employees are to be made without regard to civil service laws and regulations. I wonder why they were taken out of civil service?

Mr. GEORGE. The purpose was to enable the Board to make its contracts rapidly, as it must do. While the civil service laws do not apply, the salaries fixed in the Classification Act do apply. It was thought that that would enable the Board to procure more rapidly suitably experienced persons to do the particular job. It must be done quickly, of course, because contracts are now being made, and some are being executed.

Mr. LANGER. That would be true in any war, would it not? In order to get employees rapidly, they must be taken outside the civil service.

Mr. GEORGE. That would not be true of the established agencies of Government; but with respect to a new agency which had to do directly with the defense program, it would be true in a measure. I think we have exempted other agencies from the civil service laws under similar circumstances, when it was desirable to obtain competent persons quickly—perhaps before they could be qualified under civil service.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. With further reference to the class of contracts described in section 103 (G) (3), pertaining to services performed in obtaining contracts, with the $25,000 limitation, how is it proposed to keep track of the $25,000 limitation when the agent receives his fees from more than one contractor? Clearly, if a single contractor pays more than $25,000 to a subcontractor or to a commission agent, that can be readily determined; but suppose the agent receives fees from more than one contractor, and seeks business from the whole field?

Mr. GEORGE. I think the subcontractor is required to file a statement with the Renegotiation Board, and itemize receipts from various sources.

Mr. CASE. That is, anyone in the business of selling his influence or selling his contacts dealing with the defense contracts will be required by the act to make a report to the Renegotiation Board?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct, as I understand.

Mr. CASE. That certainly is an end greatly to be desired; and if the language in the bill is sufficient to accomplish that purpose, it will render a great public service.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe we had definite assurance that that policy would be followed in the regulations to be made effective, particularly in respect to the matter which the Senator has pointed out.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I wonder why natural gas was exempted?

Mr. GEORGE. I have already passed that point. It is exempted only when it is a byproduct.

Mr. LANGER. I ask the same question with respect to oil.

Mr. GEORGE. It was exempted under the World War II Act, and we simply followed the World War II Act. The exemption exists only when it is a byproduct of an exempted product.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to follow the Senator's pleasure. I have not been able to be present in the Chamber during all the time the Senator has been speaking. I have certain questions which I wish to ask in regard to the bill. Would the Senator prefer to complete his explanation of the bill and then have me discuss certain sections of the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I would prefer that course, unless in what I shall subsequently say I cover some of the points about which the Senator wishes to inquire.

The House bill does not provide for any carry-over of loss from 1 year to another in the case of renegotiable contracts. The Finance Committee has added to the bill an amendment permitting the excess of costs paid or incurred with respect to renegotiable contracts and subcontracts in any fiscal year over the amount received or accrued in such fiscal year, to be carried over and applied as an item of cost in the next succeeding fiscal year, subject to the regulations of the Board.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. That happens to be the point about which I wished to query the Senator.

Under the old Renegotiation Act, as I understand, the Renegotiation Board could not take into consideration, no matter what the surrounding facts and circumstances might be, a loss which occurred 1 year in connection with a profit which occurred in another year. For example, take the case of a given contractor, Mr. X. Let us say that in 1942 he made $100,000. In 1943 he lost $200,000; and in 1944 he made $5,000. When we came to consider his renegotiation problem we could not take into account the year in which he suffered the heavy loss, with the result that I am satisfied, from my own investigation of certain cases, that some great injustices were done to certain contractors.

I have two questions to ask the Senator:

First, under the terms of the bill will the Renogtiation Board be allowed the wise discretion of taking into account both the losses and the profits which a contractor may make on Government contracts, in order to see to it that equity is done to him in the final renegotiation settlement?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct—for 1 year only, however. The bill does not authorize the carry-over for more than 1 year. But if in one year there is a loss, and in the subsequent year there is a profit, the loss, if it arose out of renegotiation of a contract, can be carried forward so that equity may be done to the contractor. Some cases have been brought to my attention, and no doubt have been brought to the attention of all other Senators, where the failure to give any carry-over, even for 1 year, has resulted in great hardship and in injury to the contractors.

Mr. MORSE. I completely agree with the Senator from Georgia that that is true. I know of one case, with which the Senator from Georgia is familiar, because he has been very courteous and helpful in doing what he could as a committee member in having the case reviewed, and I refer to it here for the purpose of the RECORD because of a possible amendment I may want to discuss with the Senator from Georgia. I refer to a case with which the old Renegotiation Board did not take into account a loss suffered in one year when considering its renegotiation of a profit in another year.

Mr. GEORGE. That was done under the old law. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. So I invite the Senator's attention to page 45 of the bill, "Title II—Miscellaneous provisions," section 201, subsection (b) "Transfer of functions in general." I assume that this transfer of functions in general "conferred upon the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board by the Renegotiation Act" to the new Renegotiation Board would not permit the new board to apply the new provisions and regulations in taking into account losses suffered in 1 year as against renegotiations of profits made in another year in respect to pending cases going back to the work of the old Renegotiation Board of World War II?

Mr. GEORGE. As I am advised, the Senator's understanding is correct. The Board would only apply the old law in that case. It could not give to the contractor the benefits of any provision of this measure, which for the first time was inserted in the law.

Mr. MORSE. In reading the bill in toto, as I have, am I correct in my understanding that there is no language anywhere in the bill which possibly authorizes the new board under the new law to seek to do equity in any cases pending from the old board?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator's interpretation is correct. It does not apply. I personally have given some consideration to the problem. I had hoped that we might have some opportunity to apply an equitable provision in this measure in adjusting contracts which arose prior to the passage of this measure. But I have not been able to work out anything. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Oregon. This measure would not take care of the situation as he states it.

Mr. MORSE. Again I want to say for the record that I appreciate the outstanding fairness the Senator from Georgia has extended to the junior Senator from Oregon in regard to this problem, which I have mentioned to him in conversation and conference. I only want to say for the record that I do not think time ever rectifies or justifies an injustice. If we are, in this measure, seeking to prevent the kind of injustices which existed under the old act so far as the carry-over principle is concerned, it seems to me unfortunate that we do not take the steps necessary in this measure to clear the record of existing injustices. If we leave them to the Department of Justice under the wording of the old act, it apparently leaves the Department in no position but to follow a course of collecting from a given contractor on a renegotiation basis a return from the profits he made, irrespective of the fact that the very next year the Government itself might very well have been responsible for his suffering great loss, as I know is the case, having studied the complete record of the case I presently have in mind. Therefore, I ask the Senator from Georgia if he thinks it would be unwise and unworkable to include in this measure a power in the new board to consider on appeal or review any specific cases which would justify a modification, in view of the surrounding facts and circumstances pertaining to those cases, so as to permit the Board to prevent injustices from being meted out to various contractors who will suffer an injustice if we simply apply the strict and literal meaning of the old act?

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator that I would be very happy if a proper provision along that line could be worked out. I have been unable to do it primarily for this reason: The distinguished Senator now has in mind a pending or open case. If all the cases were open, it could be done. But, of course, many hundreds and thousands of them have been closed without this right and without the benefit of this provision, and it would open up, or create, or rather bring to light inequities in those closed cases, and there would, of course, be some substantial basis for a consideration of those cases.

However, I may say to the Senator that if, before we finish action on the bill, any suitable amendment can be prepared to enable us to take this matter to conference so we can see if there is a possibility in conference of perfecting a provision which would meet the essential and substantial equity in cases which arose under the prior law, but which are as yet open and undisposed of, I shall be very glad to give it most sympathetic consideration.

Mr. MORSE. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me to make an additional comment at this point in the RECORD, I certainly want to thank him for his offer of cooperation in this matter. In my opinion, he is correct, that the adoption of the principle for which I now argue will raise some question in regard to some settled cases. But I do not think we should overlook the fact that what we are dealing with here is not a matter involving business relations between two private contractors, but involving business relations between the United States Government and citizens of the country. Under the experience of those relationships, we have come to find, as I think the bill makes clear, that the United States Government insisted upon the application in its renegotiation of some very hard principles of renegotiation, in connection with which it failed to do equity to its citizens by not taking into account losses they suffered in one year when factually many times the responsibility for those losses was more the fault of the Government than of the citizen himself. Although doing equity now might open up some old cases, I hold tenaciously to the point that whenever my Government on the record has been found guilty of doing an inequity, I care not how old the inequity is, or how closed the case may be, if the equitable principle would be to make an adjustment beneficial to the citizen, I think it ought to be made.

If this principle—and I assert that the principle which the committee is inserting in this new bill is a sound one—is proper for the future contracts into which the Government enters in connection with the present defense program, then I say it ought to be applied to the contracts the Government negotiated during World War II, from the standpoint of reviewing cases only to determine whether an inequity or an injustice was done in specific cases by not carrying over into the following year the losses suffered in a previous year. I know we are going to find a considerable number of cases in which the Government struck a very hard bargain and worked great inequities.

Therefore, I am perfectly willing to take the position on the floor of the Senate today that we ought to reopen those cases and should give to the contractors involved the benefit of the equitable rule which we now say—having profited from the experience we had with the old act—should have applied during World War II. How many of those cases there will be, I do not know; but whether it is "Y" number or "X" number, if an inequity or an injustice were done, and if we now have a chance to rectify it, I think we should do so, and should give the review board or the appeals board an opportunity to take a look, frankly allowing it, in giving it that review power, to consider those cases and see whether an adjustment should be made.

So long as the Department of Justice takes the position that under the language of the present law it cannot take into account the fact that a loss was suffered by a contractor under conditions over which he had no control—and I challenge the correctness of that position, but this is not the place to debate that point—then I say to the Senator that the way to correct the injustices and inequities existing in the cases now pending is to give the board the power of review. Of course, I have no objection to having an adjustment made of those cases, if the Government finds that an inequity has been done.

As I indicated a moment ago, the Department of Justice takes the position that if a contractor suffers great losses during a given year as the result of unforeseen conditions which developed after the contract was entered into, the contractor cannot offset those losses against profits made during the preceding year. This situation has worked great injustice and has threatened some contractors with bankruptcy.

In this new bill the committee apparently recognizes that the Renegotiation Board and the Court of Tax Appeals should be allowed the discretion of taking into account the equities involved in cases of losses, and should permit an offset of those losses suffered during a given year against profits made during another year. I think that is right, but I think that procedure should be applied to the old cases, as well.

I assure the Senator from Georgia that following this discussion I shall proceed immediately from this floor to consult legislative counsel. I shall present this matter to him, and shall ask him to cooperate with me during the next hour in the drafting of an amendment, which I should like to submit to the Senator from Georgia, for his consideration, to see whether it can be taken to conference, because I am satisfied that the Department of Justice at the present time is working such great injustices in some cases that something must be done to check that Department in what I think are very inequitable and unjust renegotiation settlements upon which it is insisting. It is the old case of the Federal Government again collecting a pound of flesh from a citizen, when in many cases the responsibility for the situation is more that of the Government than that of the citizen.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CASE. I should like to express the hope that the distinguished and able Senator from Oregon will not propose that a new appeals board be set up to take over the functions which have been so well exercised by the Tax Court during the past few years. I hope that any suggestion of a further appeal will not result in the creation of a review board to be placed over the Tax Court.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield, to permit me to reply?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to my good friend the Senator from South Dakota that I am perfectly willing to have the Tax Court handle these matters; but what the Tax Court says now is that it is bound by the letter of the law, and cannot take into account a loss suffered one year, in renegotiating the profits made in another year, irrespective of the fact that the Government may have been responsible for the loss suffered.

Under the new bill the Tax Court will have the right, in connection with the litigation, to take into account the carryover for 1 year, as explained by the Senator from Georgia.

All I am asking for is that if that procedure is fair now, then it ought to be considered as fair under the problems which arose under the old Renegotiation Act during World War II, because I can show the Senator—as I shall be glad to do, knowing his keen sense of fairness and equity—cases in which the Government was primarily responsible for the loss which was suffered, but the contractor could not receive the benefit of those facts and surrounding circumstances in obtaining an equitable settlement of his claim. That is all I am asking for.

I care not who does it—whether the Tax Court does it or whether the Government gives the power, as is done by this bill, to the renegotiation board in the first instance.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, would the Senator have any objection to reopening cases?

Mr. MORSE. I have no objection to reopening a case if an inequity was done in the final settlement.

I am simply saying that I think the principle that losses incurred in one year can be carried over as against the profits made in a subsequent year—as is provided by this bill—is a sound principle. That is why it is provided for in this bill. I assume because of the experience under the old renegotiation law, for we found that without this safeguard in a new bill, we would continue some injustices and some inequities which the Government committed against its citizens during World War II.

I wish to see equity done not only as to future contracts, but also as to contracts with citizens whom the Government has wronged in the past.

I submit to the Senator from South Dakota that the Government has wronged a good many of its citizens in the past by not permitting that carryover to be made.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Let me say that the discretion afforded the old Price Adjustment Board was such that it was impossible for it to take into consideration the financial condition of a company. In the case of any company which had any continuing operations with the Government, it is my opinion that for the most part the record was fairly good. If anything, the Board was generous to the contractor, in case of doubt.

I think we might well consider the precise language now proposed before we give the Board, or any review or appellate body the right to reopen cases which have been closed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for 1 minute further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish most respectfully to submit notice of my disagreement with the observation just made by the Senator from South Dakota, namely, that the old Board exercised its discretion wisely or had such discretion to exercise. It had no discretion in regard to the problem covered by the language of the new bill now under discussion, namely, the taking into account of a loss suffered in 1943, as against a gain made in 1942.

I wish to cite to the Senator from South Dakota, for example, cases which fell into the following category: A contractor on a fixed-amount contract subsequently found himself confronted, for example, with the new cost of portal-to-portal pay, which caused him to take a considerable loss during the year when provision was made for portal-to-portal pay. He was not allowed by the old Renegotiation Board to take into account the new condition which caused him the loss.

I simply wish to say that the old Renegotiation Board took the position, and now the Department of Justice takes the position, as does the Tax Court, that under the language of that law they could not take into account the fact that the contractor's loss was suffered because of conditions over which he had no control. However, I think they should have the power to take those conditions into consideration or account. I think a great many injustices occurred as a result of that language which is now for the future specifically to be corrected by the new bill, and I am glad that is so. However, I repeat that the Government has been guilty of doing many injustices to contractors during World War II because this language of discretion was not contained in the old law.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me say a word further on this point, because I want to complete the record. It is believed that this provision will be particularly beneficial to the small contractor and any contractor beginning production under defense contracts. Experience has shown that losses are frequently incurred at the beginning of production as a result of tooling up and other nonrecurring charges. This is particularly true with respect to new items not previously manufactured by the contractor or subcontractor.

Under the House bill certain factors are required to be taken into consideration in determining excessive profits. Among the factors is one relating to the efficiency of the contractor or subcontractor. The Finance Committee is of the opinion that the statement of this factor in the House bill does not require favorable recognition of efficiency. Accordingly, the Finance Committee amended the House provision to require that favorable recognition must be given to the efficiency factor.

The House bill also contained a net worth factor but limited the consideration of this factor to the reasonableness of return on the net worth. The Finance Committee felt that the House provision was too restrictive and that it might preclude a consideration of replacement costs, total assets used in the business and other features. Accordingly, the House bill has been amended to require that all aspects of net worth must be considered and not merely the return thereon.

The House bill provided for the payment of interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum upon unpaid renegotiation indebtedness and in the case of amounts refunded to the contractor required the Government to pay interest also at the rate of 6 percent. The Finance Committee is of the opinion that the 6 percent rate is too high from both the contractor's and the Government's standpoint and has added an amendment reducing this rate to 4 percent.

An amendment was also adopted to the House bill preventing interest from accruing after 3 years from the date of the filing of a petition by the contractor or subcontractor with the Tax Court where there is no final determination by the Tax Court with respect to such petition within such 3-year period. This amendment will protect the contractor or subcontractor from the running of interest where payment has been postponed because of long litigation or court delays. In addition, the Finance Committee added an amendment to provide that if the Tax Court determines a lesser amount than that determined by the Renegotiation Board, interest will not accrue on such lesser amount if the contractor or subcontractor prior to filing his petition with the Tax Court tendered in payment an amount equal to or greater than the amount determined by the Tax Court.

Another amendment affecting interest which was added by the Finance Committee provides that interest on unpaid renegotiation indebtedness should not commence to run until the thirtieth day after the date of the order of the Renegotiation Board or the date fixed for repayment by agreement of the parties. Under the House bill, interest would start to run from the date fixed for repayment by order of the Renegotiation Board or by agreement of the parties.

The Finance Committee also made a series of minor amendments to the House bill. One permits affiliated groups under certain conditions to conduct renegotiation on a consolidated basis if they so request. Another expressly excludes from the definition of subcontractor purchase orders or agreements to furnish office supplies. This is in accordance with the World War II statute. A third gives the contractor or subcontractor petitioning the Tax Court, 10 days to secure a bond to stay collection pending the Tax Court proceedings instead of 5 days as provided in the House bill. A fourth amendment provides that the Renegotiation Board may employ personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations. However, such personnel will be subject to the pay limitations of the Classification Act. A fifth amendment requires all moneys recaptured through renegotiation proceedings to be covered into the Treasury. The House bill provided that all moneys recovered in respect of amounts paid to the contractor or subcontractor from corporate or other revolving funds should be restored to such funds.

In order to facilitate the execution of the national defense program, the Finance Committee also adopted an amendment to enable banks, trust companies, and other financing institutions to advance funds needed by contractors and subcontractors without incurring the liability that money due or to become due under the assigned contract or subcontract may be withheld for the collection of the renegotiation liabilities of their assignors. Upon that point, Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I shall offer a clarifying amendment to meet certain objections which have been raised by the lending institutions to that provision of the Senate bill.

To conform to more accurate accounting practice, the word "books" in several places in the bill has been changed to "records." The provision giving the Board in its determination of profits the power to eliminate items of cost which in its opinion are unreasonable, but which may be disallowed under other provisions of the bill as improper income-tax deductions, has been omitted as redundant and contradictory.

The House bill contains a provision suspending the profit limitation provisions of the Vinson-Trammel Act with respect to contracts or subcontracts, receipts or accruals of which are subject to renegotiation under this bill. At the request of the Maritime Commission, the profit-limitation provisions of section 505 (d) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, are also suspended with respect to any contract or subcontract if any of the receipts or accruals therefrom are subject to this bill.

Finally, the House adopted a provision suspending the prohibition of persons performing duties under the bill from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting claims against the United States after such person was no longer employed in any Department or the Board. The Finance Committee broadened the House provision to conform to the World War II statute so that any person employed in any named department or any department designated by the President, during the period, or a part thereof, beginning July 1, 1950, and ending December 31, 1953, will not be subject to such prohibition even though while with the Government he was engaged in performing duties not connected with the bill. This broadening of the provision is considered essential because of the desire to secure in the defense agencies men of professional experience who may desire to return to their former professions after their Government service has ended.

Mr. McCLELLAN, Mr. BENTON, and Mr. LEHMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MONRONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I desire to ask the Senator whether it is the purpose of this bill to make all Government contracts renegotiable.

Mr. GEORGE. No, I may say to the Senator, that is not the purpose. The committee was quite well satisfied of that from the general attitude and approach of Mr. Frank Roberts, who greatly assisted the committee in the preparation of its amendments to this bill, and who is at the present time the chairman of the Renegotiations Board, as I understand. We were given the positive assurance that it was not the purpose to renegotiate all contracts made, although the bill literally provides for the renegotiation of all contracts made with specific agencies; for example, with the Defense Department. At one time the committee was of opinion that it was necessary to write into the bill a limitation restricting the contracts to be renegotiated to those which were directly connected with the defense program. I have forgotten the exact language which was used. But upon fuller and more careful consideration——

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the Senator will pardon me—the committee used the language, I think, "having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense."

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct—a direct and immediate connection with the national defense. But upon more mature deliberation and upon fuller consideration, the committee was of opinion that it would be very difficult to determine or to define defense contracts.

So we decided that it would be very much better to incorporate in the report a positive and definite statement of the intent and purpose of the bill. If the House accepts this view, as I am satisfied it will, then we can request the House to put into the report of the managers themselves their interpretation of the contracts which are to be renegotiated. It is obvious that some contracts might be made by the Department of Commerce which would not relate to defense whatsoever.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is the point I am raising. It occurred to me that as the bill is now written it leaves to the renegotiating authority absolute discretion so that they could take one class of contracts not related to defense in any way and could renegotiate those, and take another class, also not related, and say, "We do not want to renegotiate these." It seems to me we are giving them pretty broad powers and investing them with discretion which they could exercise.

Mr. GEORGE. That is undoubtedly true. The Senator is quite right in indicating that if the proposed law is literally interpreted, any contract made with one of the named agencies, or any other agency which the President may later designate, could be renegotiated. But that is not the understanding of what will be done and the committee was very well satisfied and assured that that would not be the practice, particularly if we included a strong statement in the report.

Mr. McCLELLAN. By way of illustration, the Government makes contracts continually through a defense agency, the Corps of Engineers, for the construction of flood-control projects and works of that character, which are not necessarily related to the national defense at all.

Mr. GEORGE. They are not directly related, at least.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Not directly, at least.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. But the Senator agrees that under a literal construction of the bill as written, the authorities could select any one individual contract in that category and say, "We are going to renegotiate this, and not any others in this category." As I read the bill, they would have complete discretion to renegotiate any they desired to renegotiate, not as to particular classes of contracts, but as to individual contractors.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is correct in stating that, under a literal construction of the language, they would have that power. But let me call the attention of the Senator to this language in the report:

Under the House bill the President is given the authority to designate additional departments whose contracts shall be subject to renegotiation. Under the House bill, any department exercising functions in connection with the national defense might be designated. Your committee bill limits this power of the President to departments exercising functions having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense. While a literal wording of the bill would require all contracts with the departments specifically named or those designated by the President to be renegotiated, your committee contemplates that the Board by a judicious use of its power to make permissive exemptions of contracts by classes or types will properly limit the area of renegotiation where the contracts are not intimately related to the defense effort.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let me ask the able Senator from Georgia one further question. Would the renegotiation that is authorized apply to contracts which are entered into as a result of competitive bidding, as well as to negotiated contracts?

Mr. GEORGE. It would. The bill does not distinguish, as the old law did, between contracts obtained through competitive bidding and those obtained through negotiation. But the discretionary power is in the Board.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does the Senator feel it would do any violence to the bill to insert the words to which we have referred, which the committee originally considered, namely, "having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense"? Does the Senator think it would weaken the bill in any way merely to provide that the law shall say what is intended, rather than leave to the negotiating authorities the power to exercise the "judicious discretion," as the Senator has expressed it, which the committee has voiced the hope they will exercise, in view of the language incorporated in the report?

Mr. GEORGE. With respect to that amendment, I may say to the Senator that the committee did reach the conclusion that it would be unwise to write the language in the bill, for the reason which I have already indicated, namely, that it is not quite possible to define with accuracy all contracts which are immediately and directly related to national defense. There is a matter of degree, and the committee thought it would be better to leave the power within the discretion of the administrators, if the language found in the report, or the substance of it, is incorporated in the report of the managers to the House when the work of the conferees on the bill has been concluded.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I shall offer an amendment to incorporate the language to which I have referred, and I trust that in the conference report the conferees will further emphasize what the Senator has been saying, namely, that it is expected that the law will be interpreted as the Finance Committee has hoped it would be, and that it will be "judiciously" administered, along the lines suggested by the able Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Whether or not an amendment is offered and carried to conference, it will be the purpose of the Senate conferees to try to write an explicit, direct, definite statement in the conference report.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It seems to me it would be well if the amendment could be carried to conference, and upon further discussion with the conferees representing the House in the conference, I feel it can be emphasized sufficiently to impress the will and intent of Congress upon the renegotiating authorities.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, so far as the chairman of the committee and the other members of the committee to whom I have spoken are concerned, we would not have any objection to taking the amendment to conference, because we wish to emphasize the precise interpretation the Senator from Arkansas desires to put upon the law.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the able Senator from Georgia, and at the proper time I shall offer the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will offer the amendment at the proper time, I shall be glad to take it to conference.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 3, after line 3, to strike out:

(b) Renegotiation Act of 1948: The Renegotiation Act of 1948 shall not apply with respect to any receipts or accruals subject to renegotiation under this title. If a contractor or subcontractor, during the same fiscal year in which he has receipts or accruals subject to renegotiation under this title, has other receipts or accruals from contracts or subcontracts subject to renegotiation under the Renegotiation Act of 1948, the provisions of this title shall, notwithstanding subsection (a), apply to such other receipts or accruals if the Board and such contractor or subcontractor agree to such application of this title; and in the case of such an agreement the provisions of the Renegotiation Act of 1948 shall not apply to such other receipts or accruals of the fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 17, to insert:

(b) Performance prior to July 1, 1950: Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the provisions of this title shall not apply to contracts with the Departments, or related subcontracts, to the extent of the amounts received or accrued by a contractor or subcontractor on or after the first day of January 1951, which are attributable to performance, under such contracts or subcontracts, prior to July 1, 1950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 24, to insert:

(c) Renegotiation Act of 1948: The Renegotiation Act of 1948 shall not be applicable to any contract or subcontract to the extent of the amounts received or accrued by a contractor or subcontractor on or after the 1st day of January 1951, and attributable to performance after June 30, 1950, whether such contract or subcontract was made on, before, or after such first day. In the case of a fiscal year beginning in 1950 and ending in 1951, if a contractor or subcontractor has receipts or accruals prior to January 1, 1951, from contracts or subcontracts subject to the Renegotiation Act of 1948, and also has receipts or accruals after December 31, 1950, to which the provisions of this title are applicable, the provisions of this title shall, notwithstanding subsection (a), apply to such receipts and accruals prior to January 1, 1951, if the Board and such contractor or subcontractor agreed to such application of this title; and in the case of such an agreement the provisions of the Renegotiation Act of 1948 shall not apply to any of the receipts or accruals for such fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 19, to reletter the subsection from "(c)" to "(d)", and in line 22, after the word "supplemented," to insert "and of section 505 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended and supplemented (46 U. S. C. 1155 (b))."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 9, after the word "Commission", to insert "the Reconstruction Finance Corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "Corporation,", to insert "the Housing and Home Finance Agency with respect to construction undertaken by it,".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 11, after the word "functions", to strike out "in" and insert "having a direct and immediate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 19, after the word "Corporation,", to insert "the Housing and Home Finance Administrator,".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have agreed that the Canal Zone, in its official designation, shall be inserted at the proper place in the bill, if it is found to be necessary to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 18, after the word "Commission", to insert "the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 8, after the word "profits", to insert "favorable recognition must be given to the efficiency of the contractor or subcontractor, with particular regard to attainment of quantity and quality production, reduction of costs, and economy in the use of materials, facilities, and manpower; and in addition."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to strike out:

(1) Efficiency of contractor, with particular regard to attainment of quantity and quality production, reduction of costs, and economy in the use of materials, facilities, and manpower;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 18, to change the subsection number from "(2)" to "(1)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 21, to change the subsection number from "(3)" to "(2)", and in the same line; after the amendment just above stated, to strike out "Reasonableness of return on" and insert "The."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 24, to change the subsection number from "(4)" to "(3)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 1, to change the subsection number from "(5)" to "(4)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 5, to change the subsection number from "(6)" to "(5)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 9, to change the subsection number from "(7)" to "(6)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 25, after the word "carry-back", to insert "but there shall be allowed as an item of cost in any fiscal year, subject to regulations of the Board, any excess in the preceding fiscal year of costs paid or incurred with respect to receipts or accruals subject to the provisions of this title over the amount of such receipts or accruals"; on page 8, line 6, after the word "of", to strike out "cost"; in line 7, after the word "his", to strike out "books" and insert "records"; in line 8, after the word "of", to strike out "cost," and in line 15, after the word "costs" and the period, to strike out: "Irrespective of the method employed or prescribed for determining such costs, no item of cost shall be charged to contracts with the Departments or subcontracts or used in any manner for the purpose of determining such costs, to the extent that, in the opinion of the Board, or, upon redetermination, in the opinion of The Tax Court of the United States, such item is unreasonable or not properly chargeable to such contracts or subcontracts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 9, after the word "subcontract", to insert "but such term does not include any purchase order or agreement to furnish office supplies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 16, to strike out:

(h) Fiscal year: The term "fiscal year" means, except in the case of a partnership as defined in section 3797 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code, the taxable year of the contractor or subcontractor under chapter 1 of such code. In the case of a partnership as so defined the term "fiscal year" means such period as the Board by regulations may prescribe.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(h) Fiscal year: The term "fiscal year" means the taxable year of the contractor or subcontractor under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code, except that where any readjustment of interests occurs in a partnership as defined in section 3797 (a) (2) of such code, the fiscal year of the partnership or partnerships involved in such readjustment shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 11, after the word "his", to strike out "books" and insert "records."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 11, after the word "subcontractors.", to insert "The Board shall conduct renegotiation on a consolidated basis with a parent and its subsidiary corporations which constitute an affiliated group under subsection (d) of section 141 of the Internal Revenue Code if all of the corporations included in such affiliated group request such consolidation and consent to such regulations as the Board shall prescribe with respect to the determination and elimination of excessive profits of such affiliated group."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 16, after the word "the", to strike out "date fixed for repayment by" and insert "thirtieth day after the date of"; in line 18, after the word "or", to insert "from the date fixed for repayment", and on page 19, line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "6" and insert "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 9, after the words "from the", to strike out "date originally fixed by the Board for its repayment" and insert "thirtieth day after the date of the order of the Board."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 19, after the word "the", to strike out "date originally fixed by the Board for its repayment" and insert "thirtieth day after the date of the order of the Board."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 1, after the word "the", to strike out "date originally fixed for repayment by the Board" and insert "thirtieth day after the date of the order of the Board", and in line 4, after the word "repayment", to insert "except that no interest shall accrue or be payable on such lesser amount if such lesser amount is not in excess of an amount which the contractor or subcontractor tendered in payment prior to the filing of the petition with the Tax Court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 8, to insert "Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, no interest shall accrue after 3 years from the date of filing a petition with the Tax Court pursuant to section 108 of this title in any case in which there has not been a final determination by the Tax Court with respect to such petition within such 3-year period."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 3, to insert:

(5) Assignees: Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize any agency of the Government, except as provided in the Assignment of Claims Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 1029), as now or hereafter amended, to withhold from an assignee any moneys due or to become due under any contract with a Department where such moneys have been assigned pursuant to such act, or to authorize any agency of the Government to direct the withholding pursuant to subsection (b) (1) (C) of this section from an assignee bank (as defined in sec. 104 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code) or from an assignee Federal lending agency of any moneys due or to become due under any subcontract where such moneys have been assigned to such an assignee as collateral for a loan.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer a clarifying amendment in substitution of that particular committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 21, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out lines 4 through 18 and insert the following:

(5) Assignees: Nothing herein contained shall be construed (A) to authorize any department or agency of the Government, except to the extent provided in the Assignment of Claims Act of 1940, as now or hereafter amended, to withhold from any assignee referred to in said act, any moneys due or to become due, or to recover any moneys paid to such assignee under any contract with any department or agency, where such moneys have been assigned pursuant to such act, or (B) to authorize any department or agency of the Government to direct the withholding pursuant to this act, or to recover pursuant to this act, from any bank, trust company, or other financing institution (including any Federal lending agency) which is an assignee under any subcontract, any moneys due or to become due, or paid to any such assignee under such subcontract.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 19, to change the subsection number from "(5)" to "(6)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 24, to change the subsection number from "(6)" to "(7)", and on page 22, line 10, after the word "Treasury.", to strike out "All money recovered in respect of amounts paid to the contractor from corporate or other revolving funds (other than appropriations from the Treasury) by way of repayment, withholding, crediting, or suit under this section shall be restored to such funds. The Board is authorized to make regulations giving effect to the intent of this provision in respect of money recovered representing subcontract excessive profits not readily identifiable as to the public funds ultimately reflecting charges therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 20, to change the subsection number from "(7)" to "(8)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, at the beginning of line 11, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$500,000"; in line 15, after the word "than", to strike out "100,000" and insert "$500,000"; and in line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 12, after the word "Computation.", to strike out "In computing the aggregate of the amounts received or accrued during any fiscal year for the purposes of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, such computation shall be made without elimination of intercompany sales."; in line 17, after the word "the", to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$500,000"; and in line 20, after "(2).", to insert "In the case of a fiscal year beginning in 1950 and ending in 1951, the $500,000 amount and the $25,000 amount shall be reduced to an amount which bears the same ratio to $500,000 or $25,000, as the case may be, as the number of days in such fiscal year after December 31, 1950, bears to 365, but this sentence shall have no application if the contractor or subcontractor has made an agreement with the Board pursuant to section 102 (c) for the application of the provisions of this title to receipts or accruals prior to January 1, 1951, during such fiscal year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 20, after the word "market", to strike out the comma and "but only if such contract or subcontract is with the producer of such agricultural commodity."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 10, after the word "deposit", to insert "or timber", and in line 11, after the word "the", to strike out "ordinary treatment processes normally applied by producers in order to obtain the first commercially marketable product, but only if such contract or subcontract is with the owner or operator of the mine, well, or deposit from which such product is produced. The term 'ordinary treatment process' means, in the case of the product of a mine, well, or deposit with respect to which an allowance for percentage depletion is provided by section 114 (b) (3) or (4) of the Internal Revenue Code, those processes which are taken into account under such section in computing gross income from the property, and in the case of any other product such term means such similar processes as may be prescribed under regulations promulgated by the Board; or", and insert "first form or state suitable for industrial use; or"; on page 30, after line 2, to strike out:

(4) Any contract or subcontract for timber which has not been processed beyond the form of logs, but only if such contract or subcontract is with the owner of the timber property or with the producer of the logs; or

And insert:

(4) any contract or subcontract with a common carrier for transportation, or with a public utility for gas, electric energy, water, communications, or transportation, when made in either case at rates not in excess of published rates or charges filed with, fixed, approved, or regulated by a public regulatory body, State, Federal, or local, or at rates not in excess of unregulated rates of such a public utility which are substantially as favorable to users and consumers as are regulated rates. In the case of the furnishing or sale of transportation by common carrier by water, this paragraph shall apply only to such furnishing or sale which is subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission under part III of the Interstate Commerce Act or subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Maritime Board under the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933; or

(5) any contract or subcontract with an organization exempt from taxation under section 101 (6) of the Internal Revenue Code, provided that the income from such contract or subcontract would not constitute "unrelated business income" within the meaning of section 422 of the Internal Revenue Code; or

And on page 31, line 3, to change the subsection number from "(5)" to "(6)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 5, to strike out:

(b) Cost allowance: In the case of a contractor or subcontractor who produces an agricultural product and processes, refines, or treats such a product beyond the first form or state provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (a), or who produces the product of a mine, oil or gas well, or other mineral or natural deposit, or timber, and processes, refines, or treats such a product beyond the first commercially marketable state provided in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) or, in the case of timber, beyond the form of logs, the Board shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to give the contractor or subcontractor a cost allowance substantially equivalent to the amount which would have been realized by such contractor or subcontractor if he had sold the product in the form or state provided in paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a), or, in the case of timber, in the form of logs.

And in lieu thereof, to insert the following:

(b) Cost allowance: In the case of a contractor or subcontractor who produces or acquires the product of a mine, oil or gas well, or other mineral or natural deposit, or timber, and processes, refines, or treats such a product to and beyond the first form or state suitable for industrial use, or who produces or acquires an agricultural product and processes, refines, or treats such a product to and beyond the first form or state in which it is customarily sold or in which it has an established market, the Board shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to give such contractor or subcontractor a cost allowance substantially equivalent to the amount which would have been realized by such contractor or subcontractor if he had sold such product at such first form or state. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this title, there shall be excluded from consideration in determining whether or not a contractor or subcontractor has received or accrued excessive profits that portion of the profits, derived from receipts and accruals subject to the provisions of this title, attributable to the increment in value of the excess inventory. For the purposes of this subsection the term "excess inventory" means inventory of products, hereinbefore described in this subsection, acquired by the contractor or subcontractor in the form or at the state in which contracts for such products on hand or on contract would be exempted from this title by subsection (a) (2) or (3) of this section, which is in excess of the inventory reasonably necessary to fulfill existing contracts or orders. That portion of the profits, derived from receipts and accruals subject to the provisions of this title, attributable to the increment in value of the excess inventory, and the method of excluding such portion of profits from consideration in determining whether or not the contractor or subcontractor has received or accrued excessive profits, shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Board.

(c) Partial mandatory exemption for durable productive equipment:

(1) In general: The provisions of this title shall not apply to receipts or accruals from subcontracts for durable productive equipment, except to that part of such receipts or accruals which bears the same ratio to the total of such receipts or accruals as 5 years bears to the average useful life of such equipment as set forth in Bulletin F of the Bureau of Internal Revenue (1942 edition) or, if an average useful life is not so set forth, then as estimated by the Board.

(2) Definitions: For the purpose of this subsection—

(A) the term "durable productive equipment" means machinery, tools, or other equipment which does not become a part of an end product, or of an article incorporated therein, and which has an average useful life of more than 5 years; and

(B) the term "subcontracts for durable productive equipment" does not include subcontracts where the purchaser of such durable productive equipment has acquired such equipment for the account of the Government, but includes pool orders and similar commitments placed in the first instance by a department or other agency of the Government when title to the equipment is transferred on delivery thereof or within 1 year thereafter to a contractor or subcontractor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 9, to change the letter of the subparagraph from "(c)" to "(d)."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, before we leave section 103 I should like to make a very brief statement.

It is my understanding that although section 106 of the bill exempts certain public utilities and common carriers, including those engaged in water transportation under specific statutes, from renegotiation, such exemption is not intended to limit the authority of the Board to exempt certain other carriers, particularly water carriers, under the permissive provisions of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that statement is correct, and I am very glad to concur in the statement. The matter was discussed in committee when the bill was under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 18, to strike out:

(a) Creation of board: There is hereby created, as an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government, a Renegotiation Board to be composed of five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not less than three members of the Board shall be appointed from civilian life. The President shall designate one member to serve as chairman of the Board. Each member shall receive compensation at the rate of $12,500 per annum. No member shall engage in any business, vocation, or employment other than that as a member of the Board. The Board shall have a seal which shall be judicially recognized.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(a) Creation of board: There is hereby created, as an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government, a Renegotiation Board to be composed of five members to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; one by the President, to serve as Chairman; one each by the Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, respectively, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Defense; and one by the Administrator of General Services. The Chairman shall receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 per annum, and the other members shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum. The Board shall have a seal which shall be judicially noticed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 19, after the word "be", to strike out "at such place as may be determined from time to time by the Board" and insert "in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 6, after the word "to", to strike out "the civil service laws and", and in line 7, after the numerals "1949", to insert "(but without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 3, after the word "Board.", to insert "But no function, power, or duty shall be delegated or redelegated to any person pursuant to this subsection or subsection (f) unless the Board has determined that such person is responsible directly to the Board or to the person making such delegation or redelegation and is not engaged on behalf of any department in the making of contracts for the procurement of supplies or services, or in the supervision of such activity; and any delegation or redelegation of any function, power, or duty pursuant to this subsection or subsection (f) shall be revoked by the person making such delegation or redelegation (or by the Board if made by it) if the Board shall at any time thereafter determine that the person to whom has been delegated or redelegated such function, power, or duty is not responsible directly to the Board or to the person making such delegation or redelegation or is engaged on behalf of any Department in the making of contracts for the procurement of supplies or services, or in the supervision of such activity."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 6, after the word "person" it is proposed to insert "(other than the secretary of a department)"; and on page 38, line 15, after the word "person" it is proposed to insert "(other than the secretary of a department)."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 21, after the word "within", to strike out "five" and insert "ten", and on page 43, line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "6" and insert "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 3, after the words "rate of" to strike out "6" and insert "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 10, to strike out:

Nothing in title 18, United States Code, sections 281 and 283, or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99) shall be deemed to prevent any person by reason of service prior to January 1, 1954, in performance of duties or functions required by this act, from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States: Provided, That such person shall not prosecute any claim against the United States (1) involving any subject matter directly connected with which such person was so employed, or (2) during the period such person is engaged in employment in a department or the Board.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Nothing in title 18, United States Code, sections 281 and 283, or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99) shall be deemed to prevent any person by reason of service in a department or the Board during the period (or a part thereof) beginning July 1, 1950, and ending December 31, 1953, from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States: Provided, That such person shall not prosecute any claim against the United States (1) involving any subject matter directly connected with which such person was so employed, or (2) during the period such person is engaged in employment in a department or the Board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it will be recalled that when section 103 on page 5 of the bill was read for an amendment the question arose upon the inquiry of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], who has been very interested in renegotiation contract legislation in the House through the years, whether or not the Panama Canal was included or covered by virtue of any of the renegotiation acts. The information I now have is that if we wish to cover the Panama Canal and the head of the Panama Canal in subsection (b), amendments should be made. I therefore offer the amendment that, after the comma in line 10 on page 5 the words "Panama Canal" be inserted in subsection (a).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is adopted.

Mr. GEORGE. And to perfect it, I offer an amendment, after the comma in line 19 in subsection (b) to insert "the head of the Panama Canal."

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Georgia for his consideration in going into this matter. It came to my attention in a case involving several million dollars for the third set of locks in the Panama Canal subject, and I think it is wise now to take care of it. I thank the Senator for the consideration he has given the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, have all the committee amendments been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the word "contracts", it is proposed to insert ", having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment to the same effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 19, after the word "contracts", it is proposed to insert ", having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense,".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, we agreed to take these amendments to conference because they are in accordance with our interpretation of the bill. We are sure that it will be administered as provided in these amendments, but in order to give double assurance, if the amendments themselves are in conference, we will have the opportunity of writing in the conference report a definite, explicit statement.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

(6) any contract that a department awarded as a result of competitive bidding for the construction of any building, structure, improvement, or facility; or.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, I think perhaps the chairman of the committee will agree to take the amendment to conference. The amendment I have just offered would exempt from the renegotiation process any construction contract awarded on the basis of competitive bids.

This provision was contained in the Renegotiation Act of 1944 and also the Renegotiation Act of 1948. It is designed to preserve the competitive bidding method of construction contracts. Without this amendment, competitive bidding will not mean anything because no bidder will be assured of receiving the amount he bid even though he wins the award and properly completes the construction job. As a result, all bidders may have a tendency to bid too high on the theory that they must protect themselves against any possible risk of loss.

This section worked well during the previous renegotiation legislation and I believe we should continue it in this measure.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this is what is known as one of the mandatory exemptions under the World War II Renegotiation Act. I have no objection to taking the amendment to conference for consideration. The House left it out as a mandatory exemption. Perhaps it can be fully recognized under the permissive exemptions in the bill. I have no objection to taking the amendment to conference.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. If the amendment is to go to conference it occurs to me that it might be desirable to consider whether or not a distinction should be made between contracts which are operated by contractors with their own equipment and tools, and those in connection with which tools are supplied by the Government under some of the provisions for expediting production There is a vast difference when dealing with profits from contracts in connection with which the contractor uses his own capital and his own equipment, and those in connection with which he uses capital and equipment of the Government. In fact it was that difficulty which led to renegotiation in the first place, because a straight percentage tax law did not make it possible to draw a distinction between those two kinds of operators.

It is impossible for me to make any suggestion at this time as to what would be the effect of the language of this amendment, but I hope that if the amendment goes to conference, the conference will take into consideration the possibility of protecting the Government's right to renegotiate where the contractor is using Government-supplied capital or Government-supplied equipment.

Mr. GEORGE. That question would be open in conference, and I am very glad to have the Senator's suggestion. I can assure him that if the House will be disposed to accept the amendment, we will be glad to present that viewpoint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED "BASIC DATA RELATING TO ENERGY RESOURCES"—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report unanimously four resolutions, and I ask for immediate consideration of the resolutions.

I send to the desk Senate Resolution 61, upon which I ask for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee print entitled "Basic Data Relating to Energy Resources," printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 61), submitted by Mr. O'MAHONEY on February 1, 1951, was considered and agreed to.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR INVESTIGATION OF PROBLEMS RELATING TO AIRLINE INDUSTRY (REPT. NO. 115)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably with an amendment Senate Resolution 55, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the time within which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may complete the investigation authorized by Senate Resolution 50, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to April 11, 1949, as continued by Senate Resolution 308, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to July 27, 1950, hereby is extended to January 31, 1952.

The amendment of the Committee on Rules and Administration was, in line 6, to strike out "January 31, 1952,", proposed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and insert "June 30, 1951."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, what is the amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendment shortens the date for the report to June 30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be impossible to consider the amendment until permission is given for consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. The resolution appropriates no money. It simply allows the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce until June 30, 1951, to submit the report.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does this matter relate to the committee that is investigating the postal rates for the air lines?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is a part of it.

Mr. LANGER. Then I wish to object, because that job belongs to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. In view of the La Follette-Monroney Act, for the life of me, Mr. President, I cannot understand why the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce persists in studying the ocean rates and the airline rates in regard to postal matters. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has absolutely no jurisdiction over such matters.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, let me state that the investigation has been made. This resolution will extend until June 30 the time within which the committee may complete its work and may ascertain the facts on which it will report. Without such permission the committee will have no further time in which to ascertain the facts on which it is to report.

Mr. LANGER. I understand that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has spent more than $100,000 in making the investigation; and the committee did that in spite of the fact that members of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service stood on the floor of the Senate and protested time and time again.

There would be just as much sense in having the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service investigate some interstate commerce problem as there would be in having the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce take from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service its jurisdiction over a matter dealing with postal rates.

If the measure now under discussion simply involves the making of a report, and if no more money will be spent——

Mr. HAYDEN. That is all it proposes.

Mr. LANGER. Then I shall not object.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. As a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I should like to point out to the Senator from North Dakota, with whose viewpoint I have great sympathy, that the origin of this matter lies in the fact that in the early days of the air mail, practically the entire amount paid to the airlines was a subsidy, but was very unjustly charged to the Post Office Department, because the receipts from the air mail at the time were negligible.

It is quite true that as time has passed the air mail has built up tremendously, so that what proportion of this expenditure involves a subsidy, a matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and what proportion of it relates to the carrying of the mails, is the $64 question which must be answered.

It might well be that both committees could join in this work; but the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce certainly has jurisdiction in this matter because of its interstate aspects. Certainly the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service has jurisdiction over postal matters. We are seeking to determine what that aspect of the matter is, in order that the Post Office Department shall not be charged any more than is appropriately due for the carrying of the mail.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say to the Senator from Maine that 3 years ago, when this matter was up for consideration, it was entirely in the hands of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had nothing to do with it.

The La Follette-Monroney Congressional Reorganization Act provides that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service shall have jurisdiction of the postal service generally, including the railway mail service. Under those circumstances, I cannot understand how another committee can claim to have jurisdiction over this matter and can spend $100,000 in investigating postal rates, when at this time, at least, a committee is organized and ready, and has been for the past few years, to investigate such questions, and has always investigated postal matters, without ever meeting with another committee or writing to another committee.

However, at the very time when the committee did this, the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] had introduced a bill calling for an investigation of the ocean mail rates and the air mail rates, and the senior Senator from North Dakota had a resolution calling for an investigation of the railway mail rates. Representatives of the postal service came before our committee. At first they refused to bring in certain documents. Then the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] said to them, "Gentlemen, if you do not bring these documents and records, we will subpena them."

All of a sudden, the first thing we knew, after some months went by, the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] rose in the Senate and began to talk about railway rates and postal rates and a proposed investigation to be made by his committee. We objected at that time, as my friend will remember, to jurisdiction by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee over postal rates, so far as they are concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, as the Senator from North Dakota will realize, the entire matter is much larger than the question of postal rates. It is a very much larger question when we talk about the money we have been paying to the airlines, both the domestic airlines and the airlines engaged in international trade. That is much larger than the question of postal rates. If postal rates were the only issue involved, this matter would be a very simple one to settle. However, that is not the case at all.

When the Congress enacted the original law with respect to assisting the airlines to get started, Congress included in that law provisions for the making of payments to the airlines for rendering that service. Those payments amounted to far more than the postal rates involved. That is where the problem we now are facing arose.

For instance, at this very moment there are claims with the Civil Aeronautics Board for $225,000,000 for back pay. Senators may say that some of that is postal pay, and I suppose some of it is. However, postal payments and subsidy payments and all the other payments due the airlines are mixed together. Our committee has been trying to separate them and break them down, so as to separate the payments for postal rates from the other portions of the moneys which we pay to the airlines. We are trying to handle the matter of setting up those amounts in such a way that the Appropriations Committees of the Congress will completely understand the entire case.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to say that the distinguished Senator from Colorado is a very wise and very smart and very intelligent gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to read to him the portion of the La Follette-Monroney Congressional Reorganization Act which defines the duties of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and then I should like to have the Senator from Colorado tell me where in this entire portion of the La Follette-Monroney Act any jurisdiction whatever is given to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate postal rates.

I read now from the La Follette-Monroney Act:

(j) Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to consist of 13 Senators, to which committee shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the following subjects:

1. Interstate and foreign commerce generally.
2. Regulation of interstate railroads, busses, trucks, and pipelines.
3. Communication by telephone, telegraph, radio, and television.
4. Civil aeronautics.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to wait a moment at that point. At that portion, the words "civil aeronautics" appear. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. LANGER. I shall take that matter up in a moment.

Mr. BREWSTER. Very well.

Mr. LANGER. I read further from the La Follette-Monroney Congressional Reorganization Act, as it pertains to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

5. Merchant marine generally.
6. Registering and licensing of vessels and small boats.
7. Navigation and the laws relating thereto, including pilotage.
8. Rules and international arrangements to prevent collisions at sea.
9. Merchant marine officers and seamen.
10. Measures relating to the regulation of common carriers by water and to the inspection of merchant marine vessels, lights and signals, life-saving equipment, and fire protection on such vessels.
11. Coast and Geodetic Survey.
12. The Coast Guard, including life-saving service, lighthouses, lightships, and ocean derelicts.
13. The United States Coast Guard and Merchant Marine Academies.
14. Weather Bureau.
15. Except as provided in paragraph (c), the Panama Canal and interoceanic canals generally.
16. Inland waterways.
17. Fisheries and wildlife, including research, restoration, refuges, and conservation.
18. Bureau of Standards, including standardization of weights and measures and the metric system.

The Senator from Maine claims, I believe, that this matter comes under civil aeronautics; does he?

Mr. BREWSTER. Certainly it comes under civil aeronautics.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator claim that anything having to do with postal matters or postal rates comes under civil aeronautics?

Mr. BREWSTER. Civil aeronautics in this country have been developed largely under payments made under what is known as the subsidy and under the acts developed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is chairman.

Mr. President, how did it happen that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service did not consider the original legislation dealing with this matter? It was because the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has always considered matters dealing with aeronautics.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, simply because an airplane may have carried some spoiled meat, that matter would be taken from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the committee handling agricultural matters, and would be given to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Is that correct?

Mr. BREWSTER. No; but inasmuch as 90 percent of the payments we are discussing are for transportation by aircraft, it is not unusual that the matter would not be handled by the committee of which the able Senator from North Dakota is chairman.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator from Maine assert that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should consider all matters relating to pay for the carrying of mails, including railway mail service; and relating to ocean mail, pneumatic-tube service, and everything else in this category except post roads?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think that if the Post Office Department had requested an investigation of why so much postal money was being diverted to the air lines, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service would have had complete jurisdiction; but I do not think that excludes the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the exercise of a similar jurisdiction.

Mr. LANGER. That is exactly what the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service did. The junior Senator from Maryland at that time—the senior Senator now—offered a resolution dealing with exactly that proposition, and it was pending at the very time the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce took jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, if I may, I should like to point out that this investigation has been practically completed. The resolution calls for the expenditure of no money. It merely provides that the committee shall have until June 30 to complete its report. There should be no objection to that.

Mr. LANGER. There is no use objecting to it now. The matter is settled. The horse is gone, the door is locked. Is that correct?

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution reported by the Senator from Arizona amends the original resolution by restoring the original date, does it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is all it does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution is considered, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, is agreed to.

The resolution as amended and agreed to, is as follows:

Resolved, That the time within which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may complete the investigation authorized by Senate Resolution 50, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to April 11, 1949, as continued by Senate Resolution 308, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to July 27, 1950, hereby is extended to June 30, 1951.

INVESTIGATING OF PROBLEMS RELATING TO DOMESTIC BANKING AND CREDIT, INTERNATIONAL BANKING, AND DEFENSE HOUSING (REPT. NO. 116)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably with an amendment, Senate Resolution 64, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 64), which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration, with an amendment, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert an amendment in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed during the period from February 16, 1951, to January 31, 1952, to make a full and complete study and investigation of such problems as it may deem proper relating to (1) Federal Reserve matters, domestic banking policies, and credit generally, (2) international banking and policies of the Export-Import Bank, and (3) construction of housing in the present national emergency, including permanent and temporary defense housing.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-second Congress, until January 31, 1952, (1) to make such expenditures as it deems advisable; (2) to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable; and (3) with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government.

SEC. 3. Expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. The only explanation I have for the amendment is that the reference to small business has been eliminated from the resolution, because there is a Special Committee on Small Business. Of course, the Committee on Banking and Currency still retains its jurisdiction with respect to legislation affecting small business, but the investigative feature of it is transferred to the other committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment in the nature of a substitute is agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Resolution to investigate problems relating to domestic banking and credit, international banking, and defense housing."

FEDERAL MANPOWER POLICY (REPT. NO. 114)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit the final resolution. It is from the Committee on Rules and Administration. I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 53, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 53), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed during the Eighty-second Congress to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the personnel needs and practices of the various departments and agencies of the Government, with a view to the formulation of policies for the most effective utilization of civilian personnel by such departments and agencies during the period of the national emergency. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation together with such recommendations for necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ on a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LANGER. I object. There is pending a bill on the same subject. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has no jurisdiction to investigate personnel. Under the resolution, that committee would have complete charge of the Federal civil service generally. What right has the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate Post Office personnel? I certainly object to the resolution. The people affected are under civil service, are they not?

Mr. HAYDEN. This is a resolution from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Mr. LANGER. Then, I am for it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be considered. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "Eighty-second Congress," and insert "period, ending January 31, 1952."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "date", to insert "but not later than January 31, 1952."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed during the period ending January 31, 1952, to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the personnel needs and practices of the various departments and agencies of the Government, with a view to the formulation of policies for the most effective utilization of civilian personnel by such departments and agencies during the period of the national emergency. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than January 31, 1952, the results of its study and investigation together with such recommendations for necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ on a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the senior Senator from Arizona have another resolution?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no more.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 1 OF 1951, RELATING TO RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 60)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MONRONEY in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read by the legislative clerk, and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

RENEGOTIATION ACT OF 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1724) to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to House bill 1724, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 109. Redeterminations under the Renegotiation Act: Notwithstanding any statute of limitations or any other provision of law, upon application made within 1 year after the date of enactment of this title, the Board shall make a redetermination de novo of any proceedings under the Renegotiation Act of any contract or subcontract in any case in which the amendment to section (a) (4) (B) of such act made by subsection (d) of section 201 of this act is applicable.

And on page 46, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

(d) Amendment of the Renegotiation Act: Section (a) (4) (B) of the Renegotiation Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: "and there shall be allowed as an item of cost in any fiscal year, subject to the regulations of the Board, any excess in the preceding fiscal year of costs paid or incurred with respect to receipts or accruals subject to the provisions of this section over the amount of such receipts or accruals." The amendment made by this subsection shall be effective as of the date of enactment of the Renegotiation Act.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, by way of explanation of this amendment let me say that I have drafted it with the assistance of the legislative counsel within the last 30 minutes. I have no question about the fact that the language itself may need some revision and rewriting in conference, if the Senator from Georgia and the committee will permit the amendment to go to conference. My principal objective is to get this problem into conference, to see whether greater justice than the language of the present law permits, cannot be done in certain hardship cases.

I desire to make very clear, because my good friend from South Dakota (Mr. Case) raised this point earlier this afternoon, that I do not seek or propose by this amendment to create a new body or to create a new appellate court, but only to vest in the Renegotiation Board itself and the Tax Court the same authority, power, and discretion over hardship cases which accrued during World War II that they will have under the language of the new act as to new cases which may arise in the future.

It seems to me, to use an analogy, that we will be confronted in the future with some potentially sick cases for which we prescribe the serum of this new law, but at the same time we have before our very eyes some existing sick cases arising from World War II which deserve a little injection of the same serum of wise discretion, and that is what my amendment provides.

In my judgment, the problem is clear. I am perfectly willing to place the justice of my request in the hands of the Senate conferees, to see whether in conference, upon the basis of this language, there cannot be worked out an agreement which will permit the exercise of the kind of discretion in handling hardship cases growing out of World War II which I think equity entitles those cases to receive.

I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether he will permit this language to go to conference.

Mr. GEORGE. As I have indicated to the Senator, I am willing to take the amendment to conference. The great difficulty, of course, is that, in giving this remedial right in a pending case, probably there will be insistent efforts made to reopen all other cases which have been concluded by agreements between the contracting parties and the Government, or which may have been settled by decisions or orders. That is the principal objection to the proposal as urged by the renegotiation board. But I am quite willing to take the amendment to conference, look into the general equity of the matter, and see whether it could be properly restricted to open or pending cases.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. What is proposed to be done by the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon is rather broad. The amendment starts out with the language:

Notwithstanding any statute of limitations or any other provision of law, upon application made within 1 year after the date of enactment of this title, the board shall make a redetermination de novo of any proceedings under the Renegotiation Act of any contract or subcontract in any case in which the amendment * * * is applicable.

The Renegotiation Act originated as an amendment to the Sixth Supplemental Defense Appropriation Act, in April 1942. It was made retroactive to cover contracts entered into during that defense war effort. It was amended by the act of 1943 after very exhaustive hearings in both the House and Senate.

It continued in operation until after the shooting in World War II had stopped. Phases of it were reenacted in 1948. The broad field which was covered up to the end of 1946 resulted in the Government securing in excess of $10,000,000,000 in new recoveries, to say nothing of the changes which were made in respect to prices in new contracts. Now to make it possible to reopen all those cases and to bring about a redetermination de novo, or proceeding in cases where the recoveries alone exceeded $10,000,000,000, is to open a pretty wide gate.

I am aware of the argument which the Senator from Oregon presented with respect to the particular provision he would make for letting these cases go to review, but it occurs to me that since the amendment in 1943 provided the tax court as a board of appeals where the action of the Price Adjustment Board could be reviewed, and in view of the fact that the World War II Renegotiation Act was amended at various times, and the determinations under the law were made in such a large amount, the amendment would certainly open the door to a great deal of new work for somebody.

While the amendment may go to conference, I sincerely hope that the conferees will give careful study to the broad scope of the language, and resolve the doubts in favor of the original purposes of renegotiation, namely, to prevent contractors from making exorbitant profits because of defense contracts which were entered into in a hurry.

The Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Oregon, I am sure, know that at a time when the Government was proceeding with a defense effort in a hurry, renegotiation was conceived as a method whereby contracts could be let by letters of intent or on a short negotiation basis so that the work could go forward, but permitting the Government to recover in cases where an audit of the costs showed that the contemplated price was excessive, or where it was demonstrated that the contractor was making excessive profits by reason of the fact that he was using Government capital and Government equipment.

We conceived of renegotiation as a method of expediting the war and the defense effort, but with a protection for the Government and a protection for the people against excessive war profits.

I certainly hope the amendment will not be agreed to by the conferees in any form that will make it possible to reopen the door to the whole field of war contracts with which we were familiar in World War II.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I may say, in reply to the Senator from South Dakota, that I do not believe he and I are so far apart as he seems to think we are. I am not offering a wide gate, I am offering a very narrow turnstile, by which each person who is admitted to the turnstile is subjected to the very narrow application of an amendment which applies only to that language in the proposed new bill which takes the form of an amendment to section 84 (b) of the act.

I say to the Senator that the cases will be relatively few; they are not going to involve the billions of dollars of contracts which I think the Senator from South Dakota fears, and the provision will apply in only those few cases where it can be shown that injury would follow refusal on the part of the Government to take into account the losses suffered by an individual contractor because of the development of some unforeseen condition over which he had no control, and the responsibility for which in many instances rested with the Government itself.

In the negotiation procedure we do not have to worry about the big contractors, so far as the application of the law to what happened in World War II is concerned. In the renegotiation proceedings the big contractors were taken care of. The injustices fell upon the little fellows, many of them subcontractors, many of them independent contractors. The cases which I have investigated were those of very small contractors who could not afford losses which the Government forced upon them, without at least being given credit for those losses against the small profits they made in the preceding year.

What we are trying to do now is merely to say to the Department of Justice and the Tax Court that in settling these hardship cases they can exercise the discretion which the law specifically grants to them in regard to cases arising under the new defense effort.

To members of the Department of Justice who told me that some such discretion ought to be made available to them in respect to these hardship cases, I have said at considerable length that the Government is doing the kind of an injustice which two businessmen would not be guilty of if they submitted their disputes to the kind of process of settlement contemplated in the renegotiation proceeding.

I have in mind a case which arose in my State, and, as I said to the Senator from South Dakota in a personal conversation some moments ago, my attention to the inequity and the injustice to which I am addressing myself today arose out a case in my State. But I have been advised by the Department of Justice officials, and by those of the renegotiation office, that there are a good many cases in the same category.

I have sat with representatives of the Department of Justice, an they have said that if they had the kind of discretion proposed these cases would be settled on a much more equitable basis than is now possible, because what they are now saying to the small contractors is, "We will compromise with you, but we will compromise on the basis of what you would get out of a bankruptcy proceeding, because that is all we can do under the act."

I have in mind a case in the Tax Court in which the court said to Government counsel, "We are not going to take this case, but will send it back to see if we cannot get a more equitable basis on which to settle it."

I merely say, Mr. President, that when any agency of Government is confronted with factual situations in which the Department of Justice officials and the Tax Court officials say that there ought to be some language which would permit the working of justice in a case, it is the duty of the Congress to see that an amendment is adopted which gives them the wise discretion which makes that possible.

I would certainly agree with the Senator from South Dakota that it is not wise to open up the World War II cases for renegotiation, save and except in the limited bracket of cases in which the committee itself recognizes a field for future action. If the law is made to apply to future cases, then I say it is a rule of equity which should be extended to present hardship cases. I do not believe there will be as many cases as the Senator fears, but the principle should be extended to whatever past cases would have been benefited by its application. If it is a sound principle of justice, it is the duty of the Government to correct the wrongs it has committed, because if the Government has not been applying equitable principles to past cases, it should get busy and do so. I am willing to leave the renegotiating power to the Tax Court, which had the power to apply the old Renegotiation Act.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. I am somewhat bothered by the language which the Senator uses in his amendment. It seems to me it goes further than what the Senator has described in his discussion.

The amendment provides that the Board shall make a redetermination de novo of any proceedings, notwithstanding any statute of limitations or any other provision of law, upon application made within 1 year after the date of enactment. It seems to me that the amendment goes further than making it a matter which would come within the discretion of the Board or Tax Court.

Mr. MORSE. I think the Senator must read the language beyond the point at which he stops. The language continues:

> The Board shall make a redetermination de novo of any proceedings under the Renegotiation Act of any contract or subcontract in any case in which the amendment to section (a) (4) (B) of such act made by subsection (d) of section 201 of this act is applicable.

I have read the narrowing language which creates what I call the turnstile.

Mr. CASE. Yes; that is the turnstile. However, it seems to me that the language makes it incumbent upon the court to review any case which any contractor may wish to bring forward, in order to determine whether it may come through the turnstile or gate, but does not leave with the court discretion as to whether, from its own review of the case, further consideration would be warranted.

Mr. MORSE. I say most respectfully to the Senator from South Dakota that the broad language in the first part of the paragraph is necessary to give the Renegotiation Board and the court jurisdiction in the first instance. It gives it de novo jurisdiction, which must be given in the first instance. It is necessary to put limitations on what the Board may review. Such limitation is provided in the last part of the amendment. It applies only in cases in which a party can show that the facts in the case can be fitted into the pattern of the language. Because of the informality of hearings, as the Senator knows, it could be done by administrative rules and regulations of the Board, which would permit a person to file a brief or memorandum, the Board saying to him, "We will judge in the first instance whether you come under the language of the amendment on the basis of your written application." If they decide it does not, the case is thrown out. If they decide that a prima facie case has been made which justifies further review, they can grant a hearing.

I wish the RECORD to be perfectly clear that I do not intend to give a party the right to a formal hearing of record, but only that a party has a right to say, "I think, under the language of the provision, the facts in my case call for the Renegotiation Board to take a look at the written papers which I wish to file with the Board in order to see whether or not my case comes under the language." Such action could be almost ministerial.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion. It seems to me that if the bill is to go to conference the subject should be carefully considered. I think it should be pointed out that in such cases as those to which the Senator from Oregon alludes in all probability the carry-forward provision of the tax laws have already been applied, and that in many of such cases the losses have been considered in the application of the excess-profits-tax law.

Renegotiation started before we had an excess-profits-tax law in World War II. After the excess-profits-tax law was passed the price-adjustment boards took into consideration the effect of the law and the taxes which were imposed thereunder. It should not be true that very many cases would benefit by the provision, even if it were applied. Because of the fact that the carry-forward provisions were contained in the tax laws subsequently enacted, because contractors presumably received the benefit of them, and also because the price-adjustment boards were given wide discretion, and took into consideration the financial status of the companies, it should not be true that very many cases would benefit by the provision.

I certainly hope that the language which may be finally adopted will not open the gate and throw upon the Tax Court or the Renegotiation Board the vast burden of work of going over all the cases which were renegotiated and in which settlements were finally attained and agreed to by the Government and the contractors.

Mr. MORSE. I think the Senator from South Dakota and the junior Senator from Oregon are completely together as to the objectives sought to be attained. I agree with him that the cases are going to be very few.

So that there will be no misunderstanding in the RECORD as to my intent, let me assure the Senator from South Dakota that I do not intend that any benefits shall accrue to any contractor who has been accorded equity through the application of the tax laws, or through any other benefit made available to him by the Government. I am only insisting that we should be fair and see to it that equity is done to a citizen who has suffered as the result of a hardship case in renegotiation, in which the officials of the Government have not been able to exercise the wise discretion which they tell us ought to be exercised in all fairness to the citizen.

Such cases will be very few in number. I have no objection to making any change in the language of the amendment which would accomplish the end. All I am saying is I am satisfied that there are cases in which gross injustice is being done, and I think such injustice should be rectified. That is the purpose and intent of my amendment. I am confident that in conference the language can be perfected so that my intent can be carried out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 27, line 5, after the word "title", it is proposed to strike out:

If the aggregate of such amounts received or accrued during the fiscal year under such subcontracts is more than $25,000, no determination of excessive profits to be eliminated for such year with respect to such subcontracts shall be in an amount greater than the amount by which such aggregate exceeds $25,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

The aggregate of such amounts received or accrued during the fiscal year or any succeeding years under such subcontracts shall not be more than $25,000, and no determination of excessive profits to be eliminated for such year with respect to such subcontracts shall be in an amount greater than that amount.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, this morning we discussed the subject of the so-called 5 percenters, the fellows who get an almost unlimited fee for obtaining a contract for another person. In the past years the practice has been a disgrace. Men who claim to have influence, particularly men who formerly worked in a department, approach a contractor and say to him, "If you hire me and I get a subcontract for you, it should be worth $50,000 to me."

I remember that in one committee hearing it was brought out that one such person was paid $100,000 in connection with the sale of some ships. The hearing was presided over by the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY]. I think there ought to be in our Government some kind of board which would get in contact with subcontractors by advertising contracts, and not make it necessary for a man who wants a contract with the Government to pay 5 percent of it to someone for getting it.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia said this morning that the $25,000 would not be limited to any one year. In other words, a man could procure a subcontract for another and get $25,000 for it in 1951, $25,000 in 1952, and so on. My amendment provides:

The aggregate of such amounts received or accrued during the fiscal year or any succeeding years under such subcontracts shall not exceed the sum of $25,000, and no determination of excess profits to be eliminated for such a year with respect to such subcontracts shall be in an amount greater than that amount.

As a matter of fact, I do not believe that there should be paid even $25,000 to any individual for getting a subcontract for someone else. I believe that the Government ought to see to it that small concerns all over the country which want subcontracts have somewhere to go, within the Government, to obtain information with respect to contracts. A contractor in North Carolina, Kentucky, or Montana should be able to say to a Government agency, "I am equipped to do a certain kind of work." Why should a subcontractor be obliged to pay $25,000, or 5 percent, to anyone?

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the amendment may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, with all due respect to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, I think it would be a mistake to adopt his amendment, because there are many instances of engineers residing in Washington following up contracts. For example, in connection with a shipbuilding contract or any other long-term contract, it actually pays the contractor to have a representative here from year to year rather than to send a capable man from his own factory or plant. He would lose the time necessary to come here and keep matters going smoothly.

As to whether or not there should be an absolute prohibition against paying anyone for procuring a contract from the Government for another, that is another question. Such individuals have been described as the "5 percenters." It seems to me that a limitation of $25,000 under the terms of the bill is reasonable. The House placed that provision in the bill and the Senate committee did not disturb it.

I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not press his amendment, but will rather seek to amend the substantive law when some measure outlawing such agreements is presented.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, earlier in the day the distinguished Senator from Georgia said that under such an arrangement as has been described, the agent could collect $25,000 in 1 year from the subcontractor, and then collect another $25,000 next year, and the following year, and so forth, ad infinitum, so long as the contract lasted. Why should a shipbuilder have a representative here drawing $25,000 a year for obtaining a subcontract?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me or I misunderstood him. Such a payment as has been described could be made only once in a fiscal year. There is a limitation of $25,000 for the fiscal year. Of course, a contract might extend over a period of 2 or 3 years, and payment might be made for subsequent service—not for procuring the contract, but for servicing the contract, so to speak. It might be a very sensible arrangement for the principal contractor to pay the subcontractor, or a competent engineer or accountant in Washington, to keep his business straight for him.

I doubt if there could be any payment over a period of 3 or 4 or 5 years, because under the terms of the bill if the money paid or earned or accrued within a fiscal year is more than $25,000, the contract is subject to renegotiation. That ends the matter. It would be very difficult to conceive of a fee paid for procuring a contract which would not all come within the same fiscal year.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Perhaps the Senator saw the same advertisement which I read about a month ago in the newspapers of Washington, in which a certain individual offered to pay 5 percent to any person who would get him a subcontract. That advertisement was issued by an American citizen in order to get business from the Government. Does not the Senator believe that the Federal Government ought to be able to furnish the necessary information to all the small subcontractors in the country, saying to them, "If you want a subcontract, come to this department and we will see if we cannot help you get it, without paying 5 percent to anyone"?

Mr. GEORGE. I fully agree with the Senator. If I had my way, I would require every principal contractor to specify what he himself expected to do under the contract, and what material and articles he expected to procure from standard manufacturers, as well as what work he expected to let to subcontractors. That information should be published in the Federal Register, or otherwise. A contractor ought to be required to open bids on every article he expects to get from subcontractors. The bids should be publicly advertised. The principal contractor himself ought to be held responsible for failure to give such notice and provide the opportunity for subcontractors to bid.

Nearly all these contracts go to contractors who do much of the work themselves and furnish many of the articles and materials. However, some of the work is usually sublet. It is in connection with the subcontracts that most of the difficulty occurs. The subcontractor does not know whom to approach. He does not know how to go about it. He does not know what office to visit. However, if the principal contractor were required to itemize the articles which he expected to obtain through subcontracts, and the service to be rendered by subcontractors, and that information were made available to subcontractors through public notice, with the requirement that they send their bids directly to the principal contractor, it seems to me that the problem could be handled without anyone having to pay unnecessary money.

When it comes to servicing a contract through a competent engineer, architect, or accountant, after the contract has been obtained, I can see that a limitation of $25,000 a year on all the contracts of a contractor—he might have a dozen or more—is not an unreasonable limitation. Such a payment under those circumstances is not exorbitant or unreasonable. I can also see how such an arrangement might be very helpful to the principal contractor, because of saving him the expense of sending someone to Washington who might not have as much knowledge as someone already on the ground.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. My distinguished friend and I agree entirely. I wonder if an amendment along that line could not be drafted and placed in the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think it would have any part in this bill. This bill poses to do only one thing, and that is to look into the profits and earnings by the contractor or subcontractor, and determine whether or not they are in excess of a fair charge for the work done and the services and materials furnished. If the expenditure seemed fair and equitable the Board could say so. If it were excessive, under the terms of the bill machinery would be established whereby a part of the profit might be taken away, and the profit reduced to the point where it seemed to the Board fair and equitable for the entire service performed by the contractor during the fiscal year.

Mr. LANGER. Am I correct in my understanding that there is nothing in the bill which would stop the so-called five percenters?

Mr. GEORGE. Nothing except the limitation in the bill.

Mr. LANGER. The only provision in the bill is that if they make more than $25,000, the contract will be renegotiated.

Mr. GEORGE. The contracts will be renegotiated if they make over $25,000 in the aggregate on all their business for the year.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. They cannot stop with one contract.

Mr. LANGER. I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. But they are subject to renegotiation if they make more than $25,000.

Mr. LANGER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. In view of the history of this legislation and the outrageous cases which were developed through investigation, I am quite sure that the Renegotiation Board would not allow contractors or subcontractors to keep excessive profits. It could hardly be said that a whole year's work, in which a contractor may have obtained four or five or six or seven different contracts, would be excessively compensated for if the total he could receive were only $25,000.

Mr. LANGER. May I ask a final question of the Senator? The Senator says the pending bill is not the proper place for the provision proposed by my amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. I had hoped that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], who has conducted an investigation of this very subject, might recommend some legislation before his special committee is discharged, and I believe if he should do so, such legislation would be the proper vehicle to deal with the matter the Senator from North Dakota has in mind.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the very distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. LANGER. Will not the Senator take it to conference?

Mr. GEORGE. I cannot deceive the Senator. I do not think it would remain in conference, because I am sure the House Members are satisfied with what they have done. The Senate committee accepted the bill on that basis. I think it is better to deal with the subject matter of the Senator's amendment in separate legislation.

Mr. LANGER. I should like the amendment to go to conference or else secure a vote on it, because I feel so strongly about it, these persons who have looted the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not seen the Senator's amendment. May we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 27, line 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

> The aggregate of such amounts received or accrued during the fiscal year or any succeeding years under such subcontracts shall not be more than $25,000 and no determination of excessive profits to be eliminated for such year with respect to such subcontracts shall be in amount greater than that amount.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to accept the amendment but I do not think it would be wise to do so. I am perfectly willing for the Senate to vote upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have been complaining to the Procurement Office of the Army engineers about this very question, and complaining very bitterly about it, because it is an outrage for anyone to go around selling political influence. That is exactly what some do. I have talked with the Army engineers about it, and they have told me that they do their best not to deal at all with any individuals of this kind and that when a man comes in and claims he is representing someone, they make the contract directly with the party who is going to fulfill the contract. But they say that oftentimes a lawyer comes in representing a client, and nothing can be done about that, because everyone has a right to employ a lawyer. So lawyers come here who may in reality be 5 percenters. Then I am advised another arrangement exists. Oftentimes a firm which has a contract makes some engineer a vice president of the company, and he comes here and, of course, has a perfect right to represent the company.

I am sure what the Senator from North Dakota is trying to deal with, and the thing I should like to see dealt with, is the 5 percenter who holds himself out to the contractors as being able to secure contracts for them, and when contractors talk to him he tells them he has political influence. I think it is a disgrace to the Nation and to the Government that men have been able to peddle influence. I think it is a disgrace that any contractor thinks he can buy influence. I think it is a disgrace that anyone should attempt to sell it. I hope the chairman of the special committee, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], will report to the Senate proposed legislation on this subject. It is a situation which needs to be corrected, and Congress should take action concerning it.

I must agree with the chairman of the committee that the pending bill is devised for another purpose entirely. I do not think it is possible to deal with this subject adequately in the bill which is now before the Senate; but it ought to be dealt with by the House and by the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. I may say to my distinguished friend that the bill deals with defense contracts. It is drawn up specifically for that purpose. Why can we not specify in the bill that we are not going to allow any 5 percent fees for procuring defense contracts?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The bill deals with the renegotiation of defense contracts.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Not with defense contracts primarily, but with their renegotiation. It is a far different matter from dealing with contracts.

Mr. LANGER. Whether it deals with renegotiation or deals with the contracts themselves, this is a proper place, I believe, to settle once and for all the matter of the 5 percent fees for procuring defense contracts. Therefore I do not want to withdraw my amendment. The Senate can vote it down, of course. But I think this is a very fine place to find out whether we are going to pay the 5 percent or whether we are not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER]. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it——

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division Mr. LANGER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move to strike out the language beginning on line 9, page 34, continuing and including line 17 on page 35. The motion is to strike out the permissive exemptions under the renegotiation bill.

Mr. President, this is an extremely important matter. Literally billions of dollars are involved in the matter of renegotiation. We have already, under the somewhat complicated amendments proposed by the committee, tentatively adopted certain mandatory exemptions, and we now come to permissive exemptions, which are five in number. I specifically should like to invite the attention of the Senate to clause (3) at the top of page 35, namely, that the Board is authorized, in its discretion, to exempt from some or all of the provisions of this title, "Any contract or subcontract or performance thereunder during a specified period or periods if, in the opinion of the Board, the provisions of the contract are otherwise adequate to prevent excessive profits."

In other words, complete power is given to the Renegotiation Board, three of whose members are to be drawn from the armed services, to exempt any contract from renegotiation if in its judgment the provisions are sufficient to prevent excessive profits. These are tremendous discretionary powers which are granted to this Board.

The matter was gone into quite thoroughly in the Eightieth Congress by a committee headed by the distinguished senior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. I hold in my hand a copy of his report. That committee recommended that all mandatory and permissive exemptions in the future contracts should be abolished, and that there should be a renegotiation of all contracts where there was an annual volume of more than $100,000, or, perhaps, in modern equivalents, $200,000; and there were cited in support of that view the fact that in World War II, under the permissive exemptions which had been granted—in that case I believe by the procurement officers—excessively large profits were reported to have been enjoyed, although it was hard to find out about them, because the committee did not have access to the records of the companies, and there was some difficulty in getting the material from the procurement officers of the armed services.

Mr. President, if we allow this exemption, I can tell quite well what will happen: The Board will be in the position of using its own discretion in the granting of hundreds of millions of dollars in favors to war contractors; and the skies will be black with expediters, lawyers, and 5 percenters flying to Washington to join the hordes who already are here. They will exert pressure and influence upon the Renegotiation Board to make an exemption in an individual case.

Mr. President, I was very proud to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota, to try to abolish the evil of 5 percentism. I wish to say that clause 3, at the top of page 35, opens a floodgate for 5 percenters. The peddlers of influence and the fixers will swarm around Washington; and the Renegotiation Board will have great trouble in fighting them off.

When we come to the consideration of the provisions regarding the Renegotiation Board, I hope an amendment will be offered; for, Mr. President, we are putting the Renegotiation Board in an extremely difficult position. Unless its members have the character of saints and the courage of Daniel, the pressures upon them will be so great that excessive and enormous profits will be made. Even if the Board is honest, it will face pressures which will hinder honest work.

I see no reason why the floodgates should be opened in this way, with complete discretion given to the Board.

Similarly, Mr. President, I see no reason for clause 4, to authorize the Board "in its discretion to exempt from some or all of the provisions of this title (4) any contract or subcontract the renegotiation of which would jeopardize secrecy required in the public interest."

Mr. President, secrecy is not involved in the renegotiation. The secrecy referred to may be involved in the original contract. However, the profits should not be secret.

I would comment similarly in regard to the other permissive exemption provisions.

So, Mr. President, I believe we should eliminate all the permissive exemption provisions; and at the appropriate time we should limit or eliminate the mandatory exemptions, so that this renegotiation provision can be really effective.

The purposes of renegotiation, I take it, are to enable contracts to be made quickly, and yet for the Government not to be mulcted, because if the profits are large the Government can later recapture any excessive profits by means of renegotiation.

I am very glad to see on the floor the distinguished senior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. The conclusions I am stating now are those to which he came in the Eightieth Congress. I think they are sound conclusions, and I am carrying out the recommendations of his committee when I move the elimination of these clauses.

Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Hawks, one of his secretaries.

RENEGOTIATION ACT OF 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1724) to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I believe the question before the Senate is my amendment to strike out that section of the bill beginning on line 9, page 34, and continuing through and including line 17 on page 35. In other words, the purpose is to eliminate the permissive exemptions from the renegotiation powers.

Mr. President, since there are a number of Senators in the Chamber now who were not present when I raised this question originally, perhaps it is not inappropriate for me to summarize some of the things I previously said.

I should like to call the especial attention of the Senate to clause 3 at the top of page 35, which gives to the Board the power to exempt any contract which in its judgment contains provisions which are adequate to prevent excessive profits. In other words, almost complete discretion is given to the Renegotiation Board to exempt any contract from renegotiation.

The purpose of the renegotiation provisions, as I understand them, is to enable Government procurement agencies to negotiate contracts rather quickly, and then, even though the terms may be disadvantageous to the Government, to have a later renegotiation so that if excessive profits are made they can be recaptured for the Government. To the degree to which this practice operated in the past war, under the direction of General Hirsch and I believe Mr. Paull, considerable sums of money were recovered for the Government.

There was also a permissive exemption in the World War II Renegotiation Act which permitted procurement officers to grant exemptions from the renegotiation clauses. Various charges were made that these permissive powers had been used rather loosely, and as a result a committee was appointed in the Eightieth Congress, under the chairmanship of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], which went into this matter quite thoroughly, and submitted a report and recommendations. It found that the administrators of the renegotiations testified that they thought very large profits were made by some concerns whose business in whole or in part was exempted from renegotiation under some of the terms of the act.

The report goes on to say:

> No proof of this statement was offered.

I am informed that the armed services did not make available to the Renegotiation Board the details of costs, prices, and profits. In any event, as a result of the investigation, the committee headed by the senior Senator from Maine declared that any future renegotiation act should be improved in the following specific ways:

> (A) By bringing within its operation all contractors with an annual war business exceeding $100,000.

Such a provision is contained in the House bill.

> (B) Including war contracts of all Government agencies.
> (C) By eliminating all mandatory and permissive exemptions, so that all Government contractors with more than an annual business of $100,000 are renegotiated.

I call particular attention to that provision.

It seems to have been a thorough report and I think the conclusion is a very sensible one.

We can well imagine what would happen if the Board were given complete discretion to determine whether or not there shall be renegotiation. One concern after another would appear before the Board and say, "Our circumstances are different. The terms of our contract prevent excessive profits. Therefore we should be exempted from renegotiation."

That would be a natural result. It would be a way in which companies could try to save money. Furthermore, there will be men who will put such ideas into their heads—lawyers and expediters, who are vulgarly known as fixers and peddlers of influence—and will suggest that that is the way to save money. The poor Board will be subjected to the most tremendous pressures conceivable. Human character would be put to a very severe test; and human character, when it deals with Government funds, tends at times to be fallible.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I gather that the distinction between mandatory and permissive exemptions to which the Senator now alludes is that in a mandatory case the Board is not subject to the influence which otherwise would be brought to bear in a case in which permissive authority existed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. BREWSTER. I gather that the Senator in his recent study of executive agencies has found out the extent to which influences of that kind have unfortunately flourished.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There is always such a danger. Even if the Board should be completely honest, it would nevertheless be subject to constant pressures for exemption which would prevent it from doing its full work.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The administration of the old Renegotiation Act was for most of the time in charge of one of the most able and honest men that I think could be found for the job. I think he was in very cordial sympathy with our suggestion, in order to remove himself—I will not say from temptation—but from pressure.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the Senator refer to General Hirsch?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have excerpts from the testimony of General Hirsch before the committee. I quote from his testimony the following:

> The one real recommendation that I would like to make is the elimination of exemptions. That is the one recommendation I would make.

That is the recommendation of the man who dealt with renegotiations throughout World War II.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. He was a distinguished lawyer in Houston, Tex., who came to Washington at very great personal sacrifice to carry on the work. He is a man of the highest character and ability. His suggestions were given great weight by the committee which studied the subject at the time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. My untutored eye fails to see the reason for providing permissive exemptions. They open the door wide to possible fraud. They may lead to the Government's losing hundreds of millions of dollars, perhaps even billions of dollars. Such permissive exemptions would expose the Government to corruption and would expose Government officials to temptation. If the provisions for renegotiation are good, I do not see why such power should be granted. Mr. President, unless reply is to be made by the sponsors of the bill, I request the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I have requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, in 1948 and prior thereto, the Senator from Michigan was a member of the War Investigating Committee. As has been stated on the floor, that committee made a report on its investigation of the national defense program. It is Report No. 443, part 6, Eightieth Congress, second session. It was the final report of the committee.

After extensive hearings the question which is now before the Senate—namely, the practice of the Board's granting exemptions to certain contractors—came under study. I do not believe all the conclusions and recommendations of the War Investigating Committee on this subject have been placed in the RECORD, and I desire to do so at this time. I read from pages 234 and 235 of the report:

> The committee recommends that there be no exemptions under any renegotiation. The committee believes that any further renegotiation act be improved in the following specific ways:
> A. By bringing within its operation all contractors with an annual war business exceeding $100,000.

I understand the present House bill contains the figure of $100,000. The bill now before the Senate provides for $500,000. Certainly $100,000 would appear to me to be a proper contract amount for renegotiation of contracts, because the very purpose of renegotiation is to take the enormous profits, the big and unreasonable profits, out of war contracts. Obviously, the possibility of inordinate profits rises in proportion to the amounts involved.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The point to which the Senator refers was discussed in the committee. It was recognized that $100,000 3 years ago or 4 years ago is the equivalent of $200,000 or $250,000 today. It was pointed out that under the operation of our conference system, in all probability the figure would be set somewhere between $100,000 and $500,000. Therefore, I did not press the point too strongly, recognizing the very great difference in the value of the dollar at this time.

Mr. FERGUSON. I realize that the dollar has depreciated probably 50 percent as of this time. However, I still think that the principle of renegotiated contracts should apply even though the contracts are for $100,000. I say this because we have the case of large companies with their various subsidiaries, among which contracts are divided up. As a result some of the greatest margin of profits can come through the smaller contracts.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I have been in attendance at committee hearings, and have not been in the Chamber. Can the Senator inform me whether or not the bill as reported was unanimously approved by the committee?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am not a member of the committee. I cannot tell the Senator as to that.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The committee voted unanimously to report the bill. There was some difference in the committee with respect to various provisions.

Mr. FERGUSON. The vote to report the bill did not carry with it unanimous approval of all the provisions.

Mr. BREWSTER. There were reservations. I had some.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The vote to report the bill was unanimous; and the vote was substantially unanimous on all amendments considered by the committee. I do not remember any serious difference.

Mr. BREWSTER. There was one amendment, which I think is the one here concerned, with respect to which there were some differences. There were only seven Members present and voting on my motion to reconsider. The vote was 4 to 3 in favor of the motion. However, I did not press it because there were six Members missing, so I would not really consider it a record vote. However, there was that division.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator refer to the amendment which is affected by the proposal of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]?

Mr. BREWSTER. I do.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I may say that the final vote on the bill in the committee was unanimous.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think the Senator from Georgia did not understand. I stated that the bill was unanimously reported.

Mr. GEORGE. In the case of any bill of this kind, comprising fifty-odd pages, there is bound to be some division of opinion on certain provisions.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, after a study of this question of contract renegotiations the War Investigating Committee, having in mind World War II experience, made the first recomendation to which I have referred, in relation to the floor of $100,000.

The second recommendation was that a future renegotiation act might be improved by:

> including war contracts of all Government agencies.

No exceptions were stated. All war contracts were included. When we enter into a state of mobilization and are compelled to spend billions of dollars, when contractors often do not know exactly what the cost of production will be because they have not been engaged in similar businesses, the law must be such that contracts may be renegotiated. The idea is to try to prevent excessive profits, not only through the operation of the excess-profits tax, but by means of renegotiation. Whether we are actually at war, or whether we are anticipating war, enormous profits to contractors during mobilization should not be permitted. So the recommendation was to include the war contracts of all the Government agencies. I believe that is a very valuable part of the recommendation, and should be carried out.

Continuing with recommendations, to improve the World War II practices:

(c) By eliminating all mandatory and permissive exemptions so that all Government contractors with more than an annual business of $100,000 are renegotiated.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] and other Senators have mentioned on the floor the great responsibility of a renegotiating board in connection with exemptions. We can see what is likely to happen. The board cannot really tell whether or not an exemption should be made until after it has examined the contract and the profits. If a particular exemption is desired, the committee should examine the subject to determine whether or not the contract should be renegotiated. If it decides not, then it has granted an exemption, but it has done so in the particular and not in the general.

We find that on the Board there is to be a representative from each of the armed services, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. Under those circumstances, if they have general permissive powers they are likely to say, "Let the particular contract for this item go. I know those fellows in that department. They know this business. We have a great deal of work to do." That is what we run into when we have discretionary exemptions. No matter what we say about how honest these men are, they are going to have great difficulty in resisting pressure for exemptions. That is what General Hirsch, Chairman of the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board, referred to in his testimony before the War Investigating Committee on January 31, 1947. His testimony is set forth at page 23255 of part 29 of the hearings before the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense of the United States.

General Hirsch was emphatic in opposing the discretionary exemption. There was no doubt about it. I should like to read into the RECORD a portion of the testimony. The Senator from Michigan was questioning the witness:

Senator FERGUSON. Now, this may have been one of the cases, which I think we ought to cover here this morning if possible, of the exemptions, where the Government made a contract where they did not renegotiate. Was there any standard set up as to why they made contracts not requiring renegotiation?

General HIRSCH. The Senator has put his finger right upon one thing, which, based on the question of the chairman, I should like to make response to. Those of us in renegotiation do not believe that there should be in the law the privilege of granting any such exemptions.

Senator FERGUSON. But there was.

General HIRSCH. That was entirely apart from our operations.

Senator FERGUSON. But after the law provided for those exemptions, were there standards established so that they would only be granted in cases anticipated under the law?

General HIRSCH. I am sure, sir, that the procurement authorities in those cases felt that they were operating correctly, but I cannot answer for them because you see we did not grant those specific contract exemptions.

The chairman was the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. I continue reading from the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, as I understand, you are firmly of the opinion, and those associated with you in renegotiation, that any such discretionary powers——

General HIRSCH. In procurement, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That it is not wise.

General HIRSCH. That is our opinion, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is based on your observation and experience of the last 4 years?

General HIRSCH. It definitely is.

On page 23270, General Hirsch further testified:

The CHAIRMAN. We will appreciate whatever report you may want to furnish, and then we will want to ask you in later. I think the benefit of your recommendations on the over-all picture in the event of another emergency is what this committee wants to direct its attention primarily to, and you may want to take a month or two in order to think that over.

General HIRSCH. I have been thinking it over, and the one real recommendation that I would like to make is the elimination of exemptions. That is the one recommendation that I would make.

Senator FERGUSON. That is any exemptions?

General Hirsch. Yes; because there ought to be enough incentive with the kind of profit that the ones in renegotiation would accord, that ought to be enough incentive for a contractor to do his work well.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean over the $100,000?

General HIRSCH. Yes, because under that it is too small.

I should also like to call the attention of the Senate to hearings of the Senate War Investigating Committee, held in October 1947. Mr. John R. Paull, Chairman of the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board, who was successor to General Hirsch, likewise opposed authority in the act to grant permissive exemption from renegotiation. I refer the Senate to part 42 of the hearings of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, page 25499.

Mr. President, some items in the current budget will be eliminated, but it will contain more than $60,000,000,000 for defense. It seems to me that all contracts entered into under that tremendous sum of money should be subject to renegotiation. So far as is humanly possible any enormous profits should be taken out of these contracts. There is no justification whatsoever for enormous profits taken out of this mobilization emergency.

As a matter of fact, I think we all agree that there should be renegotiation of defense contracts. The House passed this legislation unanimously. There are, however some who believe the Board should be allowed to make determination as to which contracts should be renegotiated, as well as what profits should be taken out of them, and what profits should be allowed while keeping contractors from making unreasonable profits.

If certain types of contracts are not to be renegotiated, it is equivalent to saying to the Board "The amount of profit a man makes is of no importance at all. The only thing of importance is the kind of contract that can be made. If you can get a certain type of contract the Board will give you an exemption. You can make any amount of profit. We are not concerned with it. We are not going to renegotiate that type of contract."

Obviously, this is not the purpose of a renegotiation act, and it appears to me that is not a good basis for writing a renegotiation act. Yet that is substantially what we are doing when we provide those mandatory and permissive exemptions. Mr. President, I favor the recommendations made by the War Investigating Committee that all war contracts—we now call them preparedness contracts—above $100,000 should be renegotiated, and that there should not be any exemptions granted by the Board, either mandatory or permissive.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Michigan has evidently made a very thorough study of the bill. I wonder if he would express his opinion of subsection (d) on page 4, line 19, which provides:

Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, the profit-limitation provisions of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503, 505), as amended and supplemented—

And then the language of the amendment of the committee—and of section 505 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended and supplemented—

And then follows the original language of the bill—shall not apply to any contract or subcontract if any of the receipts or accruals therefrom are subject to this title.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand that to refer to the 10 percent profit provisions in other legislation, which would now be repealed.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say that under the Vinson-Trammell Act and under the Merchant Marine Act the profits were limited by percentage.

Mr. AIKEN. To 10 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. Here there is no limit on what the Board may permit the contractor to keep or what the Board may take away from the contractor. It does not work on the percentage basis at all. It would be impossible to negotiate contracts which were begun under the Vinson-Trammel Act, but were not completed, and which might come under the provisions of this measure. From January 1 of this year the contracts would come under the provisions of this measure, and all accruals or payments made thereafter would be renegotiable.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I yield the floor so the Senator from Georgia may answer further.

Mr. GEORGE. They could not be renegotiated until the Vinson-Trammel Act was repealed.

Mr. AIKEN. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question, since the Senator from Michigan has yielded the floor? This is a suspension, is it not, of the 10 percent profit limitation of the Merchant Marine Act?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. If a shipbuilding company accepted a contract and should make 40-percent profit—it probably would not make so great a profit, but suppose it should—would the contract then be subject to renegotiation under the proposed law?

Mr. GEORGE. It would be if payments were made or accruals occurred after January 1, 1951.

Mr. AIKEN. It would really be subject to renegotiation?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it would. Therefore, there would be a conflict. Under the proposed law percentages do not control. There would be a question whether the profit was unfair or excessive.

Mr. AIKEN. I am not questioning the provision. I simply wanted to know its meaning.

Mr. ROBERTSON obtained the floor.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask a question of the distinguished Senator from Vermont. In response to a question the Senator from Vermont asked of the Senator from Georgia, the latter said that the shipbuilding contract the Senator from Vermont mentioned would be subject to renegotiation, but it is true, is it not, that the Board could exempt the shipbuilding contract unless the pending amendment should be adopted?

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Vermont was seeking information. I do not know that I am in a position to answer the question asked by the Senator from North Dakota. But on hurriedly reading the exemptions which would be permitted, and which were referred to by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], it would appear that a very wide variety of contracts would be exempted from renegotiation. Almost too wide an exemption is provided.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I wish to make a few comments on the pending bill and on the pending amendment to strike out all the exemptions to be found on pages 34 and 35 of the printed bill.

House bill 1724, a bill to provide for the renegotiation of war contracts, furnishes a much needed companion piece to the legislation which we have already enacted authorizing substantial expenditures of money for defense. I assume that all of us fully concur in the statement just made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. FERGUSON), that if we are entering upon a period when $50,000,000,000 will be expended—I believe he said the sum may reach $60,000,000,000—we, of course, must have renegotiation of the tremendous war contracts. There should be no argument at all about the fundamental necessity of legislation of this kind. But before I have finished my brief comment, I desire to call attention to the fact that one of the most unfortunate developments of the mid-period of the Twentieth century is the growing, almost to the point of universality, of distrust. Apparently we have lost faith in ourselves, faith in our fellow men, and many, no doubt, have lost faith in God.

If that be true, namely, that the moral standard of those in public life today is deteriorating, as someone remarked to me in the cloakroom this morning—it is a reflection upon all the people of the United States, not merely upon those in the Government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point for a question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As a profound Biblical student, is not the Senator from Virginia impressed with the part of the Lord's Prayer which says:

> Lead us not into temptation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am impressed with all parts of the Lord's Prayer, including the part—

> And deliver us from evil.

Mr. President, I desire to point out the evil of the Senator's amendment, if I may. [Laughter.]

I say that in the last war the Board, which was not nearly what this Board is expected to be, saved $10,000,000, in excess profits, by means of recapturing those profits; and no one knows how much prices were reduced as a result of the renegotiation of those contracts. If we can trust this Board to renegotiate the major portion of $50,000,000,000 or $60,000,000,000 a year of defense contracts, and if we can trust it to do equal justice as between the contractor, the Government, and the taxpayers, certainly we can trust the Board to exercise less discretion than that which we provide for in this bill, and at least the discretion which we gave to the agency which renegotiated the contracts of the last war. If we do not have sufficient confidence in the Board, if we have so little confidence in it that we are inclined to say to it, "You cannot exempt perishable farm products, you cannot exempt prices fixed by regulatory bodies you cannot exempt 30-day contracts, and you cannot exempt some of the other things which may be found to be included in clause 3, on page 35," upon which the distinguished Senator from Illinois has specifically commented, then, Mr. President, the best thing the Senator can do is not to vote for the bill at all, because if he does not have confidence that the members of the Board will be high-type men, zealous and honest, he will be putting the necks of our businessmen in a noose, on the one hand, if he votes for this bill.

Oh, how well I remember the bitter criticism of the prototype of this bill when we first considered it during World War II. It was criticized as being un-American, as being tyrannical, as providing for star-chamber proceedings against American businessmen. Those were the charges which were made against the bill, and they were charges which a great many Republican Members of the Congress felt could be sustained. They did not want any part in putting business into a strait-jacket of that kind.

However, Mr. President, now it seems that we cannot get businessmen into any kind of a strait-jacket.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield briefly for a question.

Mr. BREWSTER. In the first place, does the Senator understand that this measure does not affect farm products? From what the Senator has said, I think he is under a misapprehension in that respect. This measure does not affect farm products at all.

Mr. ROBERTSON. As I understand, the Senator from Illinois has offered an amendment to strike out the exemptions on pages 34 and 35.

Mr. BREWSTER. Only the permissive exemptions.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would strike out the permissive exemptions on pages 34 and 35.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes; and I am talking about the permissive exemptions. On page 34 we find that farm products constitute a permissive exemption which the Senator from Illinois proposes to strike out, as I have said.

Now I wish to proceed briefly with my other comments.

Mr. BREWSTER. No mention is made of farm products on pages 34 and 35, so far as I know. At the top of page 34 there is a continuation of the definitions.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Let me ask a question of the distinguished Senator from Maine. The Government is going to buy potatoes. Are potatoes a perishable product or not?

Mr. BREWSTER. Potatoes are a perishable product.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Are potatoes a farm product?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. This portion of the bill says the Board cannot exempt perishable products. In such case, the Board cannot exempt potatoes.

Similarly, is butter a farm product, and is it perishable?

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Virginia evidently has not read the mandatory exemptions. I would be in favor of striking out many of the mandatory exemptions; and farm products are included under the mandatory exemptions, along with oil products, mineral products, and other commodities of that kind.

I suggest that the Senator from Virginia would pay the greatest possible tribute to the Board, which he has so greatly extolled, which operated during the last war if he would accept the advice of the Chairman of that Board, General Hirsch, who said we should eliminate the exemptions.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Board did a good job, but not so good a job as it could have done if it had had the kind of regulation which I recommended on this floor last August; and it was contemplated in connection with this very bill.

My distinguished friend, General Maurice Hirsch, of Houston, Tex., was referring to permissive exemptions by these agencies. The distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] now are trying to tie up those exemptions with a new agency, one which General Hirsch did not have during the last war, but which I strongly recommended last August, and which I wish to commend the House and the Senate for providing in this very bill, if I can reach that part of my remarks.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. First let me say that I am not opposing the Senator from Virginia; I wish to reenforce what he is saying. I begin with that introduction.

As a matter of fact, the objection which always has been made to any bill on this subject is that it leaves absolutely in the discretion of the Board the determination of what is an excessive profit. No standard is provided. There can be no standard for the determination of what are excessive profits. So this Board would have perfectly unlimited discretion.

Mr. ROBERTSON. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. TAFT. The Board would have unlimited discretion in deciding whether a businessman should pay back $1 or $100,000,000 under such a provision. Consequently, the permissive discretion is a very small part of the discretion given to the Board.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Ohio has very nearly covered the point I was trying to make, namely, that the discretion given in the permissive exemptions is not a circumstance as compared to the discretion the Board will have in determining that a businessman has made $100,000 of excessive profits, when the Board should have determined that he had made $1,000,000 of excessive profits, or vice versa. In this measure there is no guide or means of determination in that connection; and in that respect there will be nothing to aid the Board, except its ability and its patriotism, which will be the only things to guarantee how the members of the Board will perform in carrying out their duties under the provisions of this measure.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think there is a great deal of difference between giving the Board the discretion to determine the amount of profit to be allowed in cases in which the Board actually goes over such contracts and the work done under them, and so forth, and finally determines the proper amount of profit, as compared to giving the members of the Board the discretion to say—before they even look into the amount of the profit made, "We exempt this contract; we will not even look into it, regardless of whether a 1,000-percent profit or a 1-percent profit was made."

To my mind, those questions are entirely different. In the one case, the Board has to examine the operations under the contract and has to determine what is a fair profit in that connection. That is the essence and the whole meaning of renegotiation. It is an entirely different proposition than to say: "We exempt that contract without looking into it, regardless of how much profit has been made under it."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I am sorry that I cannot agree with the distinguished Senator from Michigan. After all, discretion is discretion. We must not assume that the Board will shut its eyes and, without knowing anything about what is involved, will blindly say, "This contract is not to be renegotiated." If the Board would do that, we would be sunk before we started with this measure, as I understand it.

I shall state my understanding of what the committee intended to do, so far as I know. Unfortunately, I no longer have the privilege of sitting in on the writing of bills of this character, involving a subject in which I am very much interested, and I love it. I did not intend to speak for more than 5 or 6 minutes this evening; I simply wished to praise in a general way the work of the committee which considered the bill.

Mr. President, I say that all we seek to do by means of this bill will be a nullity if we do not have high-type men as members of the Board, and especially if we do not have a high-type man as chairman of the Board, for this Board is not to be merely another purchasing agent with friends. That was a weakness, and in that connection there was the type of exemption about which General Hirsch complained. I know about that, for I had many contacts with him. He is a wonderfully fine man, and one of the ablest on this subject that I know of in the United States.

Mr. BREWSTER. Then the Senator from Virginia had better accept his advice.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The agencies say, in this connection, "we will not exempt so and so and so and so." But this is an entirely different matter from the other, and we can trust the Board to pass on these permissive exemptions if, as the distinguished Senator from Ohio implied, we can trust them to do the big job of ascertaining how much in the way of excessive profits has been involved in a given contract.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. It seems to me that we must not overlook the fact that in normal times substantially every contract, whether awarded by the Federal Government or by a State government, is subject to competitive bidding, and that is a sound procedure. It should be that way. It has stood the test of time. But in a period of emergency such as the one through which we are now passing, it is, of course, impossible, without incurring great delay, to follow that long established policy. We therefore negotiate contracts in many cases rather than subject them to competitive bidding. But we do it with confidence, because we have had the assurance—and we today have the assurance—that every contract will be subject to renegotiation, and that if in the interests of speed we have entered into a contract on which abnormal profits are made, that will be disclosed in the appraisal of the contract when it comes up for renegotiation. But under this permissive exemption it is proposed that we do away with the scrutiny of many bills and that we do away with that scrutiny purely by the discretion and on the discretion of the Board. For example, on page 35, we read:

(3) Any contract or subcontract or performance thereunder during a specified period or periods if, in the opinion of the Board, the provisions of the contract are otherwise adequate to prevent excessive profits——

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, with all due deference to the Senator from New York the Senator from Illinois has already read that provision. I yielded for a question, and if the Senator would not mind, will he save his speech until I have finished my brief remarks?

Mr. LEHMAN. I shall conclude my speech by asking a question: How is it possible for the Board to determine whether an excessive profit is permitted to a manufacturer, unless it scrutinizes the contract with the degree of care which could come only through the process of renegotiation?

Mr. ROBERTSON. By carrying out the provisions contained in the last two lines relating to the permissive exemption, namely, "If, in the opinion of the Board, the provisions of the contract are otherwise adequate." It is necessary for the Board to find that the provisions of the contract are otherwise adequate to prevent excessive profit, or else it cannot grant the permissive exemption under this provision.

The purpose of this permissive exemption is not to weight down a five-man board, which has to renegotiate something like $50,000,000,000 or $60,000,000,000 worth of contracts a year, with every little minor detail which might be involved in all the ramifications of the Government's purchasing system.

Is it thought that anything is to be gained by striking out these provisions, and by tying the hands of the Board, requiring it to go laboriously through every contract and possibly finding $5 or $10, and saying, "Well, no particular excess profits are involved, but we have passed on it. We have spent 2 weeks on it, and now we get around to a $10,000,000,000 contract, or else we wind up the year with only about one-half of our work done; but we are going to carry out the mandate of Congress. Nothing shall escape the fine grist, the way our mill grinds"?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is aware of the fact, is he not, that the Board, up to this time, 5 years after the end of the late war, has handled only half the applications under section 722, regarding war contracts? In other words, the volume of business was so great that the last war's business is not yet finished, although the Board did an efficient job in performing its work.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is absolutely true, and, moreover, there remain from the late war in excess of 20,000 cases, involving more than $5,000,000,000 of excess profits, which have not been passed on yet.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not have time, Mr. President, to become involved in an elaborate debate over this particular section. I merely want to call attention to the fact that it is a more strict provision than the one enacted in the late war, and that the point made by General Hirsch has been taken care of by providing an independent Board which is to be in charge of and under the direction of an outside man. So the agencies that have been doing the purchasing and building up, of course, close friendships, and all, will not have the privilege this time, which they had the last time, of saying, "Well, we know that fellow is not going to make too much; we know he is not making too much and so we will eliminate him from renegotiation."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understand from the discussion between the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Ohio, the Board has the widest latitude, with the exception of the mandatory exemptions, to determine whether a contract shall be renegotiated, and whether the Government is entitled to recover anything from such contract. That being the case——

Mr. ROBERTSON. No; I beg the Senator's pardon; I do not so understand.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the purpose of the exemption, then?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think there should be in the bill very specific directions to renegotiate; and what the Senator from Ohio and myself had in mind was that there is no standard fixed by the bill, no guide by which to determine whether the Board could find that a contract was 1 percent, 2 percent, 5 percent, or 20 percent too high. It is a matter of their discretion in arriving at what they will call excessive war profits.

Mr. AIKEN. That being the case, the Board having the widest latitude, anyway, what is the purpose of writing the specific exemptions into the bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Because, if specific exemptions are not written into the bill, the Board may be tied up with minor details in which pennies are involved, and be unable to handle contracts in which millions of dollars are involved. It was to give them some little discretion to confine their activities—and they are human, and can do only so much—to the major undertaking which is involved. Perhaps the distinguished chairman of the committee will follow me, if I may finish, in about 5 or 6 minutes. The distinguished Senator from Georgia heard all the testimony, and this bill comes from the committee by unanimous report. It may be that certain members of the committee had mental reservations about some of the details, but it comes to us with the unanimous report of the committee. It represents their judgment regarding the amount of discretion which should be given to this Board.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator contend that $500,000 is a proper limit for one contract?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am not inclined to argue that. The Senator from Virginia has no deep convictions on the subject whether it should be $100,000, $200,000, or $500,000. He began primarily merely to commend the committee for getting this proposed legislation before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the $500,000 limit does not apply to a single contract, but to the aggregate business of the contractor during the fiscal year.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator from Georgia. That explains the matter. What useful purpose does the permissive exemption serve, if, as has been explained on the floor of the Senate, the Board has the widest latitude in the matter?

Mr. GEORGE. It does not have the widest latitude to forgive. It has the widest possible latitude to tax, or to require a refund of money which it thinks is in excess of the fair value of the services rendered or the articles purchased.

Mr. AIKEN. The bill gives the Board the right to forgive if they feel that forgiveness is justified. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. No; they are never given the right to forgive. They are given the right to exempt certain contracts from renegotiation. That has been done for various reasons. I should like to read one to the Senate, if I may.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt this colloquy, but I want to say a very distinguished delegation from the Philippine Islands has been waiting very patiently since 4 o'clock to confer with me. I told them that I would meet them as soon as I could finish a 10-minute speech. That was 40 minutes ago. If my distinguished colleagues will now bear with me and will not deem that I am discourteous to them but wish not to be discourteous to guests from a foreign country, I shall proceed with the few memorandums I had prepared, and will then yield the floor to those who know more about this subject than I do.

Mr. President, as I was saying a few moments ago, we have made large defense appropriations, and we may have to increase them measurably. Therefore, it is very fitting and proper that we do as we did in World War II, namely, pass a law which, if properly administered, will be calculated to prevent excessive profits being made on defense procurement.

Last August I drew the attention of the Senate to the need for this legislation, and to the provisions of the bill which at that time had just been introduced in the House. I pointed out that the enormous increases in Government buying for defense purposes would result in high costs and excessive prices and profits unless we had the protection which the Renegotiation Act provides against these evils.

Close pricing in a defense emergency is an impossibility. Most munitions contracts are made in haste. In addition, contractors are called upon to manufacture items they have never made before, and under such circumstances costs and prices cannot be fixed properly until after some production experience has been gained. Even in the field of standard items which the contractor is already producing substantial volume increases may have a tremendous effect upon costs and profits.

During World War II the Renegotiation Act served extraordinarily well in the control of prices and profits on war procurement. It is recognized, not only throughout the Government but among businessmen as well, as the fairest and most equitable method yet devised for preventing war profiteering. More than $10,000,000,000 of excessive profits were recovered from war contractors under this act during World War II. The specific dollar results, however, are not the greatest benefit which the act afforded. Its principal virtue was in holding down costs and prices and preventing the realization of excessive profits. Just how much effect renegotiation had on reducing the cost of World War II will never be known, but it is reasonable to suppose that its over-all benefits in procurement savings were many times the amount of money actually recovered.

As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, I helped draft the original Renegotiation Act and the amendments thereto. Most of us, I believe, hesitated to bestow such a broad grant of power on the executive departments as that which was contained in the renegotiation law, but under the exigencies of the war emergency we had no reasonable alternative. We were obliged either to take the renegotiation law with all its possible faults, and the danger of the abuse of discretionary power, or risk the virtual certainty that tremendous amounts of excessive profits would be realized on war procurement.

Those of us who worked closely on this legislation tried our best to construct a formula for universal application, but the subject matter was so diverse and the field so complicated that we were forced ultimately to write a statute which relied on the judgment of the administrative agencies. We could but hope that this judgment would be applied under the Renegotiation Act in a fair and equitable manner. Certainly under the law there was room for abuses, and I have no doubt that mistakes were made. All informed persons, however, seem agreed that the act was administered in such a restrained and conscientious manner as to earn for its administrators the commendation of businessmen throughout the country. Persons in every walk of life have come to look upon the Renegotiation Act as a necessary corollary to a large defense budget.

It seems to me that in the present emergency we have no alternative except again to resort to the renegotiation law as the best device available for the prevention of war profiteering. An excess-profits tax alone will not accomplish the result. It is only through renegotiation that a powerful restraint can be laid upon excessive costs and prices in defense procurement. By rewarding efficiency and economy in manufacturing operations, by penalizing excessive charges and high costs, renegotiation serves as no other available instrument can serve to induce defense contractors to produce the best goods possible at reasonable costs and prices.

The pending bill follows very closely not only the framework, but the details of the World War II Act. In addition, it contains a series of changes from the World War II law which experience has indicated are desirable under the present circumstances. It is broad in its coverage, and it should be; it encompasses the entire field of defense procurement except for the specific exemptions of contracts for certain raw materials, agricultural commodities, and certain other specified contracts. I am informed that the bill represents the views and thinking of a wide number of persons both within and without the Government who had extensive experience with the renegotiation of war contracts during World War II.

In my remarks on the floor of the Senate in August in this connection, I pointed out two inherent dangers in drafting a comprehensive renegotiation law. One of these dangers involved the granting of broad areas of exemption from the coverage of the act. It seems to me unwise for the Congress to remove large segments of business from the field of renegotiation. It is wiser, I think, if exemptions are to be granted, that this be done by administrative action by the Renegotiation Board in the light of complete factual information rather than for the Congress to write such exemptions into the act.

Those exemptions which are contained in the pending bill are pretty much the same as those provided for in the World War II statute. In general, these exemptions have been found to be reasonable and workable from the administrative point of view.

Another danger which I pointed out in my remarks last August was in connection with the formation of the Renegotiation Board itself. The bill as reported by the Committee on Finance provides for the Renegotiation Board to be composed of five members subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Chairman of the Board would be appointed by the President, and the other four members by the secretaries of the procurement agencies charged with the primary responsibility for buying defense goods. The Board, as so constituted, conforms to the suggestions which I made last August, and would, in my opinion, best serve the purposes of the Renegotiation Act. One of the primary considerations is that the Board should be independent of departmental veto or restriction upon its judgment and actions.

I understand that the provisions of the pending bill which creates the Board, contemplates that the Board will be an independent agency and will be untrammeled by the governmental departments in formulating its rules, establishing its procedures, and in the actual handling of the individual cases which will come before it. Above all, it will be free, as it must be, to achieve a uniformity of result and application of the law as among the many cases which it will be called upon to examine.

While it is my firm conviction that the Renegotiation Board should be independent of the procurement agencies themselves, this is not to say that the Board should be completely divorced from procurement. Cooperation between procurement officials and the Board is indispensable to good administration. It seems to me that the provision of the pending legislation creating the Renegotiation Board and setting forth its duties and powers has carefully weighed these considerations, and should result in a workable and effective administrative organization.

We all realize, I am sure, that the pending bill, as did its World War II counterpart, bestows a tremendous breadth of discretionary power upon the Renegotiation Board. The dangers inherent in such broad grants of power is the price we must pay for the flexibility and scope of judgment which are necessary to achieve equity and justice in the wide variety of cases which will arise. In the last analysis, renegotiation is a matter of judgment and common sense. We can only hope that the administrators of the pending bill exercise that same wisdom and fairness and demonstrate that same devotion to duty that marked the administration of the Renegotiation Act during World War II.

With the enactment of the pending bill, there will still remain the most important element necessary to its successful administration, that is, the appointment of able, conscientious, and courageous men to interpret and apply the law. I am convinced that the American businessman will accept renegotiation in this emergency as he did in World War II as a necessary control so long as he is convinced that the act is being applied uniformly, with equality of treatment, and with fairness to the businessman and the Government alike.

Mr. McFARLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to ask the Senator if he would yield to me to make a few remarks on the pending amendment before he places his request before the Senate.

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I deeply regret that my friend the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] has to leave the floor, but he will have the RECORD tomorrow, and what I shall say in reference to his remarks will be merely my interpretation of some statements he has made with respect to the creation of the Board for the administration of the Renegotiation Act.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Virginia expresses his great regret that he cannot remain to hear the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. As he explained, a delegation from the Philippines has been waiting for over an hour to see him, and he must leave at this time. However, the Senator from Virginia will be very happy to read in the RECORD what the Senator from Minnesota has to say on the subject.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from Virginia. Thus far in the debate on the pending bill, H. R. 1724, the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has pointed out what I regard and what he has well described as a very serious weakness in the pending legislation, namely, the permissive exemptions. I am in full agreement with the remarks made on the subject by the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. I believe the recommendations made by the so-called Brewster committee in this field of legislation surely warrant the fullest and the most sincere consideration of the Senate.

Without directing my attention too much to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois, I should like to skip along in the reading of the bill. At page 36 reference is made to the section which creates the Board. I mention the section because the Senator from Virginia was speaking under the impression that this was to be an independent board.

I am sorry to have to point out to my friend from Virginia, at least for the purposes of the RECORD, that it is not to be an independent Board. As a matter of fact, the language of the House bill, starting at page 35 and carrying over to page 36, provides for the establishment of an independent agency to administer the terms of the act. That provision was within the recommendations of the Brewster committee of the Eightieth Congress. It was within the recommendations of the renegotiation officials who carried on renegotiations during World War II. However, Members of the Senate will note that it is contemplated not to establish an independent agency, but rather a Board consisting of five members, one to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, who would be the chairman, and one member to be appointed by each of the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Administrator of the General Services Agency. It should be remembered that we had a General Meyers. I submit, Mr. President, that the Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, and the Administrator of General Services are too close to procurement to be permitted to appoint or nominate the men for these very important positions on the Renegotiation Board.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator will recall also that we had a General Hirsch.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Who has been very highly extolled. The Senator will also remember that General Meyers went to jail. He did not renegotiate any contracts.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to have the Senator from Maine point out that fact. General Meyers was a procurement officer for the Air Force. All I wish to say is that it is entirely possible under the language of the pending bill for a procurement officer to be appointed as a renegotiation officer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator is altogether wrong in that respect. If he will read the entire bill he will see that the Secretaries are expressly prohibited from appointing anyone who is in procurement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy that the Senator has given me the information.

Mr. GEORGE. The purpose of having the Secretaries make the appointment is to get wholly independent persons, and there is another provision in the bill which prohibits them from going into procurement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But the bill would not prohibit them from appointing persons who are in their departments. It would not prohibit their appointing men who are in the employ of the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In the House version, which was stricken, I read:

> No member shall engage in any business, vocation, or employment other than that as a member of the Board. The Board shall have a seal which shall be judicially recognized.

The language of the House bill follows more closely the recommendations which were made in the past. The committee amendment, which I understand has been agreed to, sets up a board of five members, four of whom are to be selected by the heads of the agencies which are primarily concerned with procurement. It so happens that the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Administrator of General Services will be purchasing at least 95 percent of what is purchased. At least, their officers will be purchasing it. It appears to me that if we are to have a Renegotiation Board the directors of the Board should be as far removed from the agencies which do most of the procuring as it is humanly possible to remove them.

Mr. President, the Select Committee on Small Business, of which I am proud to be a member, has had sufficient testimony presented to it already to indicate that there is all too often a tendency on the part of procurement officers to work with their old friends. I do not mean to indicate or intimate any suggestion of corruption. After all, it is only human nature, when one has known a person for a long period of time, has had close personal contacts with him, and has acquired intimate knowledge of the individual and his business, that relationships should become so personal as to make it difficult to render the judicious decisions that must be made by a renegotiation board. I wish to point that out as a weakness in the bill. I do not know why the language of the House should be changed. It followed the recommendation of the distinguished General Hirsch, which was brought to the attention of the Senate in the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to point out again that General Hirsch was a product of the very system which the Senator now condemns. He was selected by the former Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson. In his recommendations General Hirsch did not have the benefit of the investigation made by the distinguished committee which recently reviewed the activities of five presidential appointees, which have resulted so very disastrously. I assume that perhaps the committee which considered the subject felt it was rather conclusively shown that presidential selection of a board is no conclusive evidence or assurance that the board's powers will be administered with sole regard for the interests of the Government.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator for his observations, and for his little twist on Presidential nominations. However, I should like to call to the Senator's attention the recommendations of his own committee. I refer particularly to the fifth recommendation:

> The renegotiation agency should be a separate agency, independent from the procurement authority, and designed to handle renegotiation of all services and branches of Government.

It is the contention of the junior Senator from Minnesota that we cannot have an independent procurement authority when the Secretary of the Air Force, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Army, and the Administrator of General Services, who are responsible for 95 percent of the procurement, are to select four members of the Board.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. CASE. In my opinion, the point that there is a possibility that the Board would be the creation of the procurement agencies, which is the point the Senator from Minnesota is discussing, is the real weakness which we are trying to correct. The act of 1943 made it possible for the Secretary to exempt a contract from renegotiation. I refer to the following language:

> If in the opinion of the Secretary provisions of the contract or subcontract are otherwise adequate to prevent excessive profits, he may provide that renegotiation shall apply only to a portion of the contract or subcontract or shall not apply to performance during a specified period or periods and may also provide that the contract price in effect during any such period or periods shall not be subject to renegotiation.

In other words, the 1943 act gave more power to the Secretary, who was the procurement agency in each case, than is proposed by the permissive section of the pending bill which would be stricken by the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

However, the real weakness, it seems to me, is in the provision for creation of the Board, making it possibly the creature of the procurement agencies. That danger is coupled with section 107 (f), which provides for delegation of power. That creates a real danger, for in paragraph (f) of section 107 the Board is authorized "to redelegate any such power, duty, or function to any agency of the Government and to authorize successive redelegations thereof, within limits specified by the Board."

I am afraid that under the language of the bill, not merely could the Board itself create exemptions, but it could delegate to other personnel the power to create exemptions. It seems to me that it would strengthen the bill to restore the language of the House with regard to the appointment or selection of members of the Board, so as to separate them from the procurement agencies. If the Board were truly independent, there would not be so much risk involved in permitting the Board to say that certain contracts are sufficiently protected in the terms of the contract.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator from South Dakota. I agree with his position. I believe that his clear analysis of the difficulties involved in the bill is directly to the point. That was what I was striking at when I was discussing the question of the creation of the Board.

Mr. President, I intend to ask on Wednesday for a reconsideration of the vote on the committee amendments in section 107. Some Members of the Senate were not alerted as to the consideration of the amendments, and I feel that it is only fitting and proper that they should be opened up for further discussion.

I wish to take note of the fact that in the bill there is a complete mandatory exemption of any contract or subcontract with a common carrier for transportation, or with a public utility for gas, electrical energy, water, communications, or transportation, under the thesis that such activities are regulated either by local, State, or Federal Government.

I think the records of the Government of the United States will indicate that one of the most flagrant overpayments on the part of the Government in World War II was for railroad transportation. I find that the excess profits tax law excludes the same instrumentalities or enterprises. Now they are excluded from renegotiation. Yet I read recently, within the past week, that the profits of the railroads were the greatest they have been in 15 years. We are going to exclude them again.

If we are to exclude a major enterprise such as the railroads, which enjoy special privileges in handling postal matters, which are able to go to the Interstate Commerce Commission and get rate increase after rate increase, which are able to have, without any investigation which amounts to anything, wreck after wreck, and which are able, more or less, to get their own way economically in this country, I say that that provision in the law is not equitable. It is not fair. It does not do service to those who are compelled to renegotiate. It does not permit economic justice in the defense effort.

Mr. President, I also feel very strongly that if a limitation or basic minimum of $100,000 was adequate in World War II, when we needed full mobilization, then surely $200,000 or $250,000 ought to be adequate now in a preparedness and defense program.

I remind Members of the Senate that since July 1, 1950, the rate of profit in defense industries has been exorbitant. I also remind the Senate that it is entirely possible, under the $500,000 limitation incorporated in the bill, for a company to break up its contracts into $500,000 units, and therefore evade entirely the whole process of renegotiation.

There are several provisions of the bill which require our attention. First, there are the mandatory exemptions, which have been altered; the permissive exemptions, which the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has so properly pointed out; the increase of the figure as contained in the House bill from $100,000 to $500,000 as a minimum or floor for renegotiation; and the change in the provision for the creation of the Board. These provisions indicate to me that the bill needs very careful analysis and study on the part of every Member of the Senate.

There is a great deal of talk in the Senate and in the House about economy in government. There are two or three ways to achieve economy in government. One is by reducing expenditures. That is fine. I am in favor of reducing nondefense expenditures to a minimum. I commend my distinguished friend, the Senator from Illinois for the work which he has done in that field, and I intend to join with him in many of his efforts.

There is another way to get economy in government, and that is to see that waste in government is eliminated—the kind of waste which all too frequently creeps into a military preparedness program. We must watch that waste carefully and analyze every budget, every request for an appropriation.

There is still another way to economize in government, and that is to see to it that those who are the promoters of the economy cry on the outside of Congress—mainly those who are able to profit the most—do not profit excessively at the expense of the American taxpayers.

We have had many examples of such excessive profits during the period of inflation and speculation in the commodity markets. There has been a tremendous rise in the prices of chemicals and minerals. The Preparedness Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee has pointed out that in all the defense efforts inflation has cost our Government $3,000,000,000 for defense materials. I submit that unless the Renegotiation Act is so written that the Board will be independent, above reproach, purer than Caesar's wife, unless the Board is able to delve into any contract of substantial size without fear or favor, unless it is removed from all kinds of political pressure, the American taxpayer will be forced to pay hundreds of millions of dollars of extra cost for the defense effort.

It is not adequate to say that $10,000,000,000 was saved in World War II. The question is, How much could have been saved had there not been permissive exemptions? I submit that in connection with this bill it is our job to see to it that every dollar possible is saved. The tax burden is terrific. It is being shared by every citizen of the United States. Some who are least able to pay are paying proportionately the most.

Not only should we see that there is equitable treatment in connection with taxes, but there should be equitable treatment in terms of the privileges of Government. This bill deals with privileges. It deals with that area of American industry and enterprise which is privileged to assume the great obligation of defense production for the United States. That great area of American industry did very well for itself in World War II. In this period of defense, which we hope will prevent world war III, it surely seems to me that we ought to minimize, to the best of our ability, any opportunity for excessive profits.

Many features of the bill are sound and constructive. I should say that that is true of 90 percent of the proposed legislation. However, I repeat that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is sound. I repeat that the creation of the Board must be carefully scrutinized. Some of the mandatory exemptions should be carefully scrutinized.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, we had thought it advisable not to have a meeting of the Senate tomorrow, in order to give committees an opportunity to catch up on their work. The hour is growing late, and there are several speeches yet to be made.

In order that we may know when we are to vote on the pending amendment, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, at 2 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote on the amendment of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], or on any amendment or motion proposed thereto, the time between 12 noon and 2 o'clock to be divided equally between the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCLELLAN in the Chair). Is there objection?

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask a question. How can a Senator who wishes later to speak on the amendment assure himself of obtaining some time to do so?

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator from Washington has merely to contact the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] or the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], depending on which side the Senator happens to be on.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the very able majority leader whether it is his intention to proceed with possible amendments to later sections of the bill, and whether he would also include in his unanimous-consent request a motion to recommit.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, that will be included in the latter part of the request I propose to make.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in order to conserve the time of the Senate I wish to say I do not believe that 2½ hours will be needed for debate.

Mr. McFARLAND. The time would be less than 2 hours. I have requested that the vote be taken at 2 o'clock. Before that there must be a quorum call.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It seems to me the question could be decided in a briefer period of time than that. If the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] wishes the time before action on the amendment to be 2 hours, that is agreeable; but I thought if he is willing that we might save some time by perhaps limiting the total time for debate to an hour, with half an hour on each side.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that is agreeable to me.

Mr. McFARLAND. Very well. I amend my unanimous-consent request by changing the time for the vote to 1:30 p. m. instead of 2 o'clock.

Mr. President, in order to try to move the voting along on Wednesday I further ask unanimous consent that on all other amendments the time for debate be limited to 30 minutes, divided 15 minutes to each side, all amendments to be germane.

I further ask unanimous consent that debate on the final passage of the bill be limited to 30 minutes, 15 minutes on each side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

The unanimous-consent agreement, as subsequently reduced to writing, is as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Wednesday, February 21, 1951, at the hour of 1:30 p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the amendment proposed to the bill (H. R. 1724) to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes, by Mr. DOUGLAS, on pages 34 and 35, striking out the provision relating to permissive exemptions, and upon any amendment or motion (including appeals) proposed to said amendment: Provided, (1) That after the disposition of the amendment proposed by Mr. DOUGLAS, debate upon any other amendment or motion (including appeals) shall be limited to not exceeding 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the mover of any such amendment or motion and Mr. GEORGE; (2) that no amendment or motion that is not germane to the subject matter either of the amendment of Mr. DOUGLAS or of the bill shall be received; and (3) that on the question of the final passage of the bill not to exceed 30 minutes debate shall be permitted, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. WHERRY (or some Senator designated by him).

Ordered further, That on said day of Wednesday, February 21, 1951, the time between 12 o'clock noon and said hour of 1:30 p. m. shall be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by Mr. DOUGLAS and Mr. GEORGE.

SERVICEMEN'S INDEMNITY ACT OF 1951

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the amendments which I have offered on behalf of myself and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY and Mr. KILGORE] are designed to eliminate a glaring injustice in H. R. 1. Not only is there an injustice to individuals in that bill, but one which is socially unwise and undesirable. I refer, of course, to the fact that the bill in its present form deprives the young men and women who will and are serving their country in the present emergency of the right to take out national service life insurance.

I wish to make clear at the outset that I am not opposed to the indemnity provisions of H. R. 1, nor to any other of the desirable provisions of that bill. I advocate and support the passage of H. R. 1 with the amendments I propose. I consider that measure a much better bill than it was when it came from the House. I think this is a tribute to the conscientious endeavors of the distinguished Senator from Georgia and the members of his able committee. I think it most desirable that all those who serve in the present military effort be protected by an automatic insurance provision which will make available to their dependents the uniform sum of $10,000. We owe that much, if not much more, to those who serve and to those they leave behind.

But the bill in its present form is not insurance; if it is insurance, it is death insurance, and not life insurance. It is good for one trip only, like the insurance you buy when you set foot on an airplane or a train. It is good for the duration of this emergency but it ceases to have any force or effect once the serviceman takes off his uniform and returns to civilian life, an eventuality we all hope and pray for at the earliest possible time.

At this point I should like to say that I was and I am in favor of the provisions contained in S. 84, a bill introduced by the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. S. 84 provided that any serviceman who dies or has died in line of duty on or after June 27, 1950, shall be presumed to have been covered by a national service life insurance policy in the amount of $10,000. Obviously, the intent of this bill was to protect those Korean veterans who die in the service of our country who have not taken out a national service life insurance policy. S. 84 affected neither existing national service life insurance policies nor the rights of future veterans to those policies. However, the seeds of the idea contained in S. 84 have apparently germinated and grown in H. R. 1 into a plant which, while it contains worthwhile fruits, threatens certain rights which servicemen have enjoyed in the past. If the Senator from Georgia wishes to substitute the provisions of S. 84 for those of H. R. 1 at this point, I shall be very happy to support such a move.

I am convinced, however, that in the anxiety to provide an indemnity for all servicemen and to set up a new system of insurance to cover the servicemen who die while in the Armed Forces, an important and dangerous change has been made. The bill in its present form—without my amendment—would take from the "new" serviceman a real benefit which in the past all servicemen have had. I repeat, we are about to take from the new servicemen a benefit formerly available to all servicemen.

The benefit of which I speak is the opportunity to apply for, and obtain, NSLI. In my opinion, this is a valuable and a vital benefit. It is a socially desirable benefit. It is a benefit to the Nation as well as to the individuals concerned.

Let me try to describe some of the benefits of Government insurance. In the first place, except in unusual cases, the young man who is inducted into the Armed Forces at age 18, 19, or 20 will probably not have been carrying a commercial life insurance policy. If these men are in the Armed Forces for a period of 5 years, they will certainly not be in a position to obtain commercial policies during that period. Upon being released from the Armed Forces, they would find that the premiums on any insurance policy based on their then-attained age will be higher than the premiums at any earlier age. This will discourage many from having any life insurance at all. This will handicap those who have served their country in the Armed Forces as against those who have not. Obviously, by placing a man in a position where he cannot get life insurance, we are placing him in a position where he is forced to pay a higher premium when he finally does obtain a policy.

There is, of course, still another benefit of Government-sponsored life insurance. NSLI premiums are lower than those of commercial policies. For example, the premium on NSLI—participating—policies at age 25 is $16.22 per $1,000 on an ordinary life policy. On one of the cheaper commercial policies similar to the NSLI policy, the annual premium per $1,000 of insurance at age 25 is $23.10, a difference of $6.88 per thousand dollars per year, or for a $10,000 policy, $68.80 per year, or $688 in 10 years.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a chart to support my previous statements. This chart indicates that in other commercial policies and for different types of insurance, the difference is even greater.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Gross annual premiums per $1,000 at age 25

[Including waiver of premium benefit]

	Ordinary life	20-payment life	20-year endowment
National service life insurance (participating)	$16.22	$25.10	$41.20
Travelers (nonparticipating)	17.15	28.59	47.75
Aetna (nonparticipating)	17.15	29.08	47.48
Connecticut General (nonparticipating)	17.15	28.86	47.43
Equitable of New York (participating)	23.10	34.36	52.16
Provident Mutual (participating)	22.23	34.36	51.80
Northwestern Mutual (participating)	21.05	34.11	50.41

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, this again is a very real benefit which our servicemen should certainly have. If our country is to show any gratitude for the service rendered, for the sacrifices made, for the risks taken, our country should continue to make this benefit available to those who enter or are about to enter the armed services.

As an argument for discontinuance of NSLI, it is said that veterans in World War II were not generally insurance-minded and that many did not avail themselves of their opportunity to continue national service life insurance in civilian life. While that may be partially true, it is not fair on this account to deny such an opportunity to future veterans who may wish to avail themselves of such an opportunity.

It is maintained that because of the unwieldy nature and expense of the NSLI program, it should be discontinued. But House bill 1 would not actually discontinue this program. It provides that the program shall be continued for present policyholders and for those new veterans who cannot get commercial policies after their release from active duty. Depending upon the span of life of present policyholders and upon the length of the present emergency, the national service life insurance program may have to be continued for the next 50 or 60 years. I submit, Mr. President, that since such a program must be continued, it would not be disproportionately more expensive to extend NSLI policies to those new veterans who may wish to make an application upon their release from active duty. Since we must maintain the administrative machinery to take care of present policyholders and of the new disabled veterans, why not utilize this machinery for the others?

My amendment numbered 2–15–51–D provides that the veteran may obtain NSLI insurance at the premium rate for his attained age on June 27, 1950, or at the time of entry into active service, whichever is later. This will mean, of course, that the veteran will be required to pay premiums in an amount less than those required for his age at the time he actually made application. The premiums which he would pay under this amendment would be based on his age at the time he entered military service or as of June 27, 1950, whichever was later. This, in effect, sets up a procedure similar to that which affected veterans of World War II who were able to take out insurance upon their date of entry into active service. The veteran would not suffer because he had not had an opportunity to apply for a policy; and, in addition, he would pay lower premiums based on a lower age. Obviously, there would be a deficiency in the national service life insurance fund resulting from this provision. My amendment authorizes and directs the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to transfer from the national service life insurance appropriation to the national service life insurance fund such amounts as are necessary to make up this deficiency.

Mr. President, I have prepared another amendment, numbered 2/15/51–E, which would grant the "new" veteran the same opportunity as that to be granted under my first amendment, namely, the opportunity to apply for and receive a national service life insurance policy. This second amendment, however, would permit the veteran to backdate his policy to any date not prior to his entry into active service, or June 27, 1950, only upon the condition that he pay the required reserve to reimburse the fund. I think this amendment, which will cost the Government virtually nothing, is the minimum which should be accepted. If the veteran wishes, he may pay the premium required for his then attained age. If, however, he has the means, and desires to back-date his policy in order to take advantage of a lower premium rate and to invest any savings he might have, he has the opportunity of doing so. Under this amendment, it is not necessary for the Administrator to reimburse the fund.

The indemnity provisions are left untouched, and any savings which might accrue to the Government through these provisions during a period of extended mobilization are unaffected. This amendment simply extends to "new" veterans the same privilege which World War II veterans have enjoyed.

Mr. President, I could make many further arguments on this subject. I could discuss the basic philosophy of national service life insurance, and the social theory of insurance. I could describe how beneficial it is to the Nation to have these millions of young men and young women covered by national life insurance. To a large extent, they are individuals who would not otherwise have any kind of insurance. I could, indeed, if I had time, produce statistics which might show that many young people, introduced to life insurance through national service life insurance, have taken out commercial policies in addition. I could argue at length that national service life insurance is not an interference with the functions of commercial insurance companies, any more than the postal saving system is an interference with the functions of our great private banks.

But there is no need for me to go into these profound and controversial arguments. The fact is that we have national service life insurance. It is on the statute books. Some millions of young men and young women now are protected under it. They have contracts which cannot be revoked.

The only question is whether we are going to withdraw the right from our new service men and women—from the young men and young women who are leaving college, interrupting their young careers, who are going out of high school, who are volunteering, who are entering the service of their country as part of our country's struggle for peace and freedom, and for survival. The question is whether we are going to withdraw from these young people the right which was enjoyed by their older brothers and sisters in World War II, and by their fathers in World War I.

There is no reason for withdrawing that right from them. There is no justice in doing so. It would almost be an act of cynicism to use the grant of one benefit as a cloak behind which to snatch away another which is of equal, if not greater, importance.

I have heard, Mr. President, that the big insurance companies have worked to eliminate this right from our new servicemen. I do not know whether this is true. I deeply hope it is not true. I prefer to believe that in something as basic as this the sponsors of this proposed legislation have simply overlooked this phase of the subject. I prefer to believe that in their commendable desire to provide emergency coverage for all, in the dangerous days immediately ahead, they have inadvertently bypassed the problem of the future day when our young men and young women can come back to their places in a nation at peace with itself and with all other nations in the world.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. BENTON obtained the floor.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BENTON. Is the Senator from Oregon requesting me to yield in order that he may make an insertion in the RECORD?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; I should like to make an insertion in the RECORD, with the understanding that in yielding to me for that purpose the Senator from Connecticut will not lose his right to the floor.

Mr. BENTON. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon with that understanding; and then I shall yield likewise to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, with a half-minute explanation of the insertion, I wish to say that I had intended today to discuss for a few minutes foreign policy. It is said that there is a great debate going on in the Senate from time to time on foreign policy, but I think it is important that we bring to bear in that debate the points of view of some who are not Members of the Senate. I have in my hand a speech entitled "Forty-five Minutes Ago—and Tomorrow?" delivered on February 8 by Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor. I had intended to read extensively from that speech and to comment on it today. But I shall not take the time to do that. I read but three sentences from it. Mr. Canham says:

> Some people are telling us we should hole-up in Fortress America and await the worst. That would be a fatal step. That would concede Europe and Asia to the Communists, with all their vital resources and skills—the Ruhr and probably Japan. We could not hope to resist successfully such a combination of power.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the body of the RECORD as part of my remarks the complete speech of Erwin D. Canham, entitled "Forty-five Minutes Ago—and Tomorrow?"

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORTY-FIVE MINUTES AGO—AND TOMORROW

(By Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor)

You and I and all the rest of us in the free and partly free world are living in one of the great opportunity moments of history. Just now our national thinking is in a maze of confusion. The problem is to snap out of it. Our task is to awaken each and all to the true nature of this crisis and to what we can do about it in terms of individual and group action.

First. What is the crisis? Putting it into broad and revealing terms, it is the age-old conflict between those who say the state is greater than man and those who say man is greater than the state—greater than anything else under God. Indeed, the conflict is to some extent between those who believe that individual man himself represents an infinite and imperishable value and those who deny all infinite and imperishable values, including God and truth itself. Least of all is the crisis of our time a power-political struggle between the United States and the U. S. S. R. And yet we have permitted much of the world to think of the conflict as between two imperialisms—or, worse, between capitalism and communism. Nothing could be further from the truth. The struggle is between the age-old idea of freedom and the age-old idea of slavery—between a belief in idealism and spiritual values and a doctrine that is profoundly materialistic.

Second. What can we do about it? Well, we can awaken to the true facts of the present situation and proceed to carry out in action a program that can prevent another world war and can insure the survival of individual freedom and opportunity.

Let us then take a hard look at the facts.

We see our own Nation in a period of doubt and uncertainty. We see Western Europe even more dubious and uncertain. We see confident communism spreading steadily into the soft spots of the globe. We see communism in possession of enough physical power to push us out of Asia and able to push free government out of Western Europe as well, although at the risk of considerable retaliation.

But we see several important deterrents to this use of communism's physical power. We still have some time. If we use it rightly, I believe we can still prevent a third world war and pave the way for a period of growing understanding and stability.

We ourselves have two great sources of power. One is fundamental and one is derivative. The fundamental power we have is the power of free men and free society. M. Tuve: "The greatest single discovery of World War II was the efficiency of the free system." The derivative power—and we have it because we are free—is still the physical striking power of the atomic bomb. But the bomb is not itself power. The power lies in the capacity of free inquiry and organization which produced the bomb, and which the totalitarians were later able to copy. (The natural scientists who were driven out of Europe by racial persecution and the denial of free inquiry might well have produced the bomb first for Hitler and Mussolini. We must be careful not to stifle free inquiry and free teaching here.)

And in addition we have all the other elements of physical action which men in a free society can produce. We have been rudely aroused by events in Korea, and we are proceeding to organize and apply this power so that we will have force enough with which to repel aggression. If we do this job effectively, there need be no war, if you accept the assumption that there is still some margin of time. If there is no margin, we must do the best we can, and fight for freedom on whatever terms are available. In the end, even then, freedom will win, but it could be a hard fight.

There are several reasons, in addition to our atomic bomb stock pile, why we may have a margin of time. One is that the Russians, and in particular Marshal Stalin himself, have always had a great respect for industrial potential. Their own industrial potential is still believed by experts to be less than they would deem necessary before launching a major war. Another reason is that—regardless of our atomic bomb stockpile—the Russians themselves need a minimum number of bombs to do the job of aggression and surprise. It is reasonable to assume they do not have that number of bombs now. Another reason why the Russians may not strike soon toward a world war is that they are doing altogether too well without war. Satellite and subversive action are serving the Russians effectively. They might be expected to continue such successful tactics, without taking the grave risk of a major war.

Now, you will see that I am weaving together here two approaches: the moral approach and the physical approach. I believe they are completely interrelated. For Americans the immediate problem is a moral awakening; a clearing of the air. What does that mean? Well, I think we have to go back to the simple fundamentals. The Communists have cast over human thinking a blanket of confusion. They tell mankind that they are revolutionaries, and that we are reactionaries, defending the status quo. If that were true, we would be licked at the start. But that is the very opposite of the truth.

The fact is that our system is the true revolution, and that communism—like totalitarianism of any kind—is reaction, is part of the same tyranny by which kings and emperors and dictators have tried to tie man to the chariot wheel of the state down through the ages. Our system sets men free. Their system puts men into chains—physical chains, and, worst of all, mental chains. A century ago, Marx and Engels in the Communist manifesto said: "The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win." Where, in today's world, are the people in chains? Is it in the United States, where the proletariat (hateful word), where working people have more authority and more share in government and a better standard of living and more genuine freedom than ever before? Certainly we have unsolved and only partly solved problems, such as that of race relations. We will always have unsolved problems—always have a hill up which to climb. But we have made a lot of progress; we are on our way even in race relations. Are the people in chains in Great Britain, where labor's own government has held or shared power off and on for a quarter century? Is man in chains anywhere in the Western World half as much as he is in the world's most extensive Communist state, the Soviet Union, where tragic millions, suffering and dying, are wearing the literal chains of slave labor and prison camps? Where are the chains today? Where are the mental chains? Are they in the free universities or the free churches of the Western World? Or are they in the Communist states, where government is the source of every law, every truth, every norm of conduct, every social and economic relationship, and where no science, no music, no economic activity, no philosophy, no art, no theology, is to be permitted unless it is state licensed and state controlled?

That kind of police state is not revolution in the true and noble and traditional sense of that word. It is blackest reaction, as old as the hills. Now the great importance and value of our system is that its mind is free, it is capable of self-criticism, of self-improvement, of internal challenge, of perfectibility. We can do a far better job of setting men free than we have ever done, and this generation should dedicate itself to the task of doing it. I do not mean a crusade to the ends of the earth. I mean first and foremost awakening in our own thinking here in America, and proving by example that the free system holds the seeds of liberty for all mankind.

But because I emphasize the significance of free society in action here in America is not to ignore the challenge in far-away places. With other deeply involved nations doing their full share, we must carry out our treaty obligation to defend Western Europe. If we prepare with determination to do this job, I believe we will never actually be faced by war. In terms of human experience, as far as our understanding has yet elevated us, the best way to avoid a war is to be willing to fight it if we have to. This is as true of nations as it is of individuals, and that is part of the necessary awakening. Some people are telling us we should hole up in fortress America and await the worst. That would be a fatal step. That would concede Europe and Asia to the Communists, with all their vital resources and skills—the Ruhr and probably Japan. We could not hope to resist successfully such a combination of power. But we have no need to limit our own capacity of resistance in this way. We can continue in a grand alliance of free or would-be freemen—the states of Western Europe and part of Asia. Yet, of course, some of them are as confused now as some of us are.

Let us then awaken out of this confusion by reminding ourselves that we are the true revolutionaries of history, that we have the power of free society and freemen in our grasp, and that we must put these dynamic truths into action. I believe this is precisely what General Eisenhower is telling the Western Europeans today, and it is not just a pep talk. It is a sober calculation. I grant you that there are dangerous months ahead. But I have given you the estimates of the best authorities I could consult that the Russians are not likely to strike in a major way in the near future. We may be wrong. But we must go forward. If we show sufficient determination, I believe there is the chance to create a balance of forces temporarily in the world. In such a period of stalemate, I believe we should do our utmost to demonstrate the values of self-government and the free system to all wavering parts of the world. I believe, in the long run, this would lead to the modification of the Communist system itself, which has already changed greatly since 1917.

There are excellent peace terms we could offer the Soviet Union, and they include no need or vestige of appeasement. We offer them full right of development and progress within their own area. We only ask that they do not enslave other peoples now free. We ask for the right of self-choice for the nations around the Soviet borders who have been conquered and overthrown. This may seem a lot to ask, but it could be worked out on terms which would not endanger the security of the Soviet Union in the least. China could be permitted to evolve in its own way—to make the choice between communism and the free system which it has not yet by any means decided. Under these proposals, which could be greatly elaborated to give the Russians fullest assurances of development and progress within their own area, the world could stabilize. Nobody would benefit more than the Russians themselves. In the end—I must be frank—I believe freedom would win out there, too, but by an evolutionary process not necessarily involving the early overthrow of the 14 men in the Kremlin.

We all face a mighty challenge. It is not the challenge of making war but of being willing to make war in order to preserve peace. Maybe some day—surely some day—we will evolve into a better way of doing these things. In the words of a recent Archbishop of Canterbury, there is a case for pacifism, but there is no case for waging war ineffectively. At this stage of human thinking and experience I do not believe we really have the chance of choosing pacifism, but I respect deeply all who think so. I remain convinced that to choose pacifism today would be to doom the world to conquest by communism, and it would be a long time before we would be free from that yoke.

Similarly, if we withdraw and permit Western Europe to fall into Communist hands, it will be a long time before it is free again, and it will be immensely difficult if not impossible to preserve freedom here. That is why I think that the United States and Western Europe must recapture their joint morale and go ahead speedily to take the steps necessary to make Russian aggression suicidal. The Russians are shrewd and realistic, and I am sure they would choose our peace terms rather than a major world war.

Our generations face a mighty opportunity. It is in the final analysis the third chance of this century to make a lasting peace. Twice before we have tried. Once we failed totally. It is too soon to say whether we have failed to make peace this second time or not. A limited war is under way in Korea, a cold war is under way everywhere. Our job—through strength—is the task of preserving peace. It will interrupt our private lives. If we are quick enough and strong enough and determined enough we may well not have to fight. But if we have to fight, that will be an opportunity too, an opportunity brave men have taken down through all the years of history. We want to make that kind of sacrifice unnecessary and impossible. I think it is still possible that we can do so.

But first and foremost we must clear our own thinking, and that will help to clear that of our allies, too. Let us clear it by reminding ourselves that we have the doctrine and the system, proved in action, that really sets men free—that is the real revolution. We should be singing the songs and waving the banners and writing the poems. Our revolution goes back a long way: to the revelation of one God and one law, in the Ten Commandments, on the hills of Palestine, to the prophets of Israel. Our revolution continues, on those same hills, with the revelation of Jesus Christ and his doctrine of love and brotherhood of all mankind. It continues with the experience of orderly government we adopted from the Greeks and the Romans. It is enriched by the humane traditions of Western Europe. On our own continent it was carried forward through new frontiers of freedom, with the aid of waves of rich human resources and cultures coming to the New World from the Old. This tradition of ours is no mere doctrine, no unsupported ideal. We have proved it in practice. We prove it daily in our free—and perfectible and self-critical—institutions.

It is to this truth that we must awaken. Once we realize our own basic and truly spiritual power, we can apply it in action effectively and overwhelmingly. We can lift the spirits of men now in darkness. We can weld together the forces of freedom, for everywhere in their hearts men yearn to be free even if freedom is expressed—as it may well be—in the need for a bowl of rice and some rags to wrap around your feet. Our system shows men how to get the rice and the rags and spiritual freedom, too. Not our system narrowly viewed—not just an American system—but the common tradition of constitutional self-government which the free world and the partly free world are striving toward.

The next few years may be the most enriching years of our lives. We may be saving values that have been a long time building. We may be saving ourselves and all that we all hold precious. We may—and I think we can and will—prevent a third world war by being ready for it if it comes, but striving at all times, as citizens, to support the wisdom and statecraft which may be able to avert the war if we have strength enough not to invite aggression.

I know that armament races traditionally lead to wars. I know also that balances of power have preserved peace for long periods in human history. We can turn a balance of power into an overwhelming preponderance if we once teach the world the meaning of free society. We must understand and utilize in the world the flaming sword of an idea: The idea of freedom, put into daily practice. Your physical efforts, plus your comprehension and our mutual dissemination of that idea, can turn today's darkness into tomorrow's light.

I am reminded of these words written during the First World War:

Rejoice, whatever anguish fill your heart,
That God has given you, for a priceless dower,
To live in these great times and have your part
In freedom's crowning hour.
That you may tell your sons who see the light
High in the heaven, their heritage to take:
"I saw the powers of darkness put to flight;
I saw the morning break."

AMERICAN WEAPONS SEEPING INTO RUSSIAN-CONTROLLED LANDS—EDITORIAL FROM THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a short article published in today's Wall Street Journal, entitled "American Weapons Are Seeping Into Russia-Controlled Lands." In this article it is pointed out that United States war materials shipped to Europe under the arms-aid program are being sidetracked by international criminal groups operating in Vienna and Stockholm and are finding their way into Russian-controlled lands.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

American weapons are seeping into Russian-controlled lands.

United States war materials shipped to Europe under the arms-aid program are being sidetracked by an international criminal ring, smuggled through Vienna and Stockholm into Communist countries, according to rumors in Germany which are confirmed by Scandinavian reports. United States Army officials in Germany refuse to discuss the size of the hijacking operation but hint it is causing concern.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to say, in connection with the article, that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] today submitted a concurrent resolution condemning the shipment of war materials by European countries into Russian-dominated countries. I think the resolution perhaps should have gone further and condemned our own country for its shipments of raw cotton to Red China since the war began in Korea, because five different shipments of cotton, which had the complete approval of the United States Government as a deal negotiated by an agency of the United States Government, have been found to have gone to Red China since the Korean War broke out.

NONMILITARY INSTRUMENTS OF INTERNATIONAL POLICY

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, the Congress and the people of the United States have been engaged for the past 2 months in what has been called the great debate. It has been an important debate, and a useful debate. It has helped show the American people that the overpowering issues of our time are in the field of foreign policy. But the time has come to point out that the debate has centered on a narrow facet of our policy, on a subject so limited in scope that it has tended to create a distorted picture of the world crisis.

Boiled down, the issue of the debate has come to be: How many divisions of troops should we send—when, and where? I think this preoccupation with the disposition of our Armed Forces has been unrealistic and spiritually deadening. It is as though a chess player attempted to attack or defend only with his knights and bishops, forgetting his queen and his rooks. The debaters have been neglecting the slowly learned lesson of recent years that there are important nonmilitary instruments of international policy which must be used in concert with the Armed Forces; that these nonmilitary instruments are at least as important as the Armed Forces in the influence they can exert. I have talked about this many times before.

Mr. President, Lenin once declared that the Soviet regime rested on a balance of coercion and persuasion. This has been true of all regimes, as it has of their foreign policies. Lenin saw this more clearly than most, and he studied more realistically the dividing line between coercion and persuasion. Paradoxically, the Soviet in the past 30 years has put far more proportionate emphasis on persuasion than we have; and it is we, with our faith in freedom, who have put and are putting more proportionate emphasis on force.

Yet for us military strength by itself can create nothing worth struggling for: nothing worthy of survival. A 20-year competitive race with the Soviet Union in developing weapons of destruction would leave our world in spiritual ashes, even if by some miracle open conflict did not break out. Necessary as is military strength it can never by itself promote or preserve freedom.

On several occasions I have pointed out that there are three major instruments of foreign policy in addition to military policy. In simple terms, the four instruments are: (1) military policy—or force or the fear of force; (2) diplomatic policy—or deals and bargains; (3) economic programs and policies—or goods; and (4) information and education—yes, propaganda—or words.

I shall not discuss force and diplomacy this afternoon. Force has been debated on this floor in extenso. As to our diplomacy, I shall content myself with the observation that, measured against the problems it has faced, and judged also by the relatively inadequate bargaining power our negotiators have had over the past 5 years in terms of force, goods, and words, our diplomacy has been more successful than most Americans seem to think. At a later date I propose to touch further on our diplomacy through a talk about its chief architect, Secretary Dean Acheson. I had planned the talk for today but finally decided to handle it separately rather than interrupt the trend of discussion here.

As to instrument number three—our international economic programs and policies—I want to comment briefly on their impact on instrument number four, our information and education program, or our words.

A year ago I described the Marshall plan as "by far the most imaginative step we have taken in our foreign relations since 1945." I added that it was no accident that the Marshall plan was also our most successful step—that it not only contained communism but rolled back communism. Today we are working on another great and imaginative idea in the economic field, which is symbolized by the phrase, point 4. Thus far, I feel the point 4 idea has been ineptly presented to the Congress and to the American people. When the Congress realizes the tremendous potentialities of this brilliant concept, in undeveloped areas where the Reds are manipulating adroitly the legitimate aspirations of the people, I predict that we shall see a great flowering of it.

Henceforward our economic instruments and our information instruments—what I have called our goods and our words—must move in ever closer alliance. For example, in our proposed shipment of 2,000,000 tons of wheat to India, if the United States insists that the story of these shipments is told to the Indian people and to the people of Asia, we shall have a fine example of integrated economic and information policy.

In recent years there has been far too little relation between the two. On the economic front we Americans are now beginning to assist other peoples, within our capabilities, not with grand-scale industrialization projects, but with help to realize their specific, immediate local aspirations. On the information front, we ought to be putting far more emphasis, not on telling people what we think they ought to know about the United States, or even telling them about the blessings of personal liberty—important though these messages are—but upon helping give them the information they are seeking, specific information that will help them to realize their ambitions for self-development. Like good salesmen and good diplomats, we must talk to them in terms of their interests and not primarily of ours. We must do this first, foremost, and all the time.

Mr. President, I should like to quote three paragraphs by Prof. Ralph Barton Perry, of Harvard University, which appeared in yesterday's New York Times:

The Voice of America should speak of civil and cultural freedom to Western Europe, but of national and social freedom to Eastern Europe and Asia. This is not double talk, because all of these freedoms are parts of our democracy. I should not object to talking of any of them anywhere. But I should put the emphasis on national autonomy and social betterment through modern methods of agriculture and industry in speaking to those parts of the world which are revolting against imperialism and exploitation.

Above all, I would have this Voice speak for, and not against. Nothing is to be gained by thinking and talking in negative terms. So far have our anti-Russianism and anti-communism gone that even freedom has come to mean only something which the Russians do not have and which communism cannot give. Unless it has a positive message for the world—a message that will seem positive because it promises to satisfy existing needs and fulfill existing hopes, and by action as well as by words—the Voice of America might as well remain silent.

The Presidential directive under which I operated as Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Public Affairs in 1945, 1946, and 1947, was, in retrospect, an overly simple one. My directive was to present to the peoples of the world a full and fair picture of American life, and of the aims and policies of the United States Government. Events have broadened and intensified the tasks of the program. Now it must meet and defeat the challenge of Communist propaganda. It must do even more than that, much more. It must offer hope to the peoples of the world, in their own terms, the hope of progress and well-being as the hope of freedom. It is true that foreign people are curious about the United States; they welcome and profit by a fair and full picture of the United States. But they are far more curious about their own future than they are about ours.

Now we cannot outpromise the Russians. They do not have to live up to their promises as we do. So part of our program must be to expose the fraudulent nature of the Russian promises. But that is wholly negative. The greater part of our information and propaganda program must carry the message of hope which is implicit in our own honest efforts to help struggling peoples everywhere.

Thus it would seem to me that the substance of much of what we want to say is not merely to try to explain our Formosa policy, or describe our universities, or outline the progress of race relations in the United States. We want to tell foreign peoples in print, by radio, by movies, and by exchange of persons—tell them—what they eagerly want to know about production, about agricultural methods, health, and sanitation, and other down-to-earth problems. Our American program must now intermix as never before these two types of activities—our economic policies and our program of information and education.

Almost a year ago, in the Eighty-first Congress, I submitted, on behalf of myself and 12 other Members of the Senate, a resolution calling for what I termed a "Marshall plan in the field of ideas." Some of the most distinguished men in the country, including the President, General Eisenhower, General Marshall, Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, Mr. Bernard Baruch, Secretary Acheson, former Secretary Hull, Mr. John Foster Dulles, and Gen. David Sarnoff, have spoken up strongly and specifically in support of the basic idea. Many of these had spoken often before, but the hearings on the resolution (S. Res. 243) provided a further and renewed opportunity. During the past year many Members of the Congress have recognized the growing importance of this area, not the least being Senator TAFT in his major address on the floor of the Senate on January 5. Books have been published on this problem, one of the latest of them being "War and the Minds of Men," by Prof. Frederick Dunn, of Yale. Many magazine articles have appeared, one of the latest of which, in the current issue of Fortune magazine, outstrips anything I have suggested for the program by proposing that $500,000,000 a year be appropriated for it. Dr. George Gallup, the public opinion analyst, far outdistances Fortune with a proposal of 5 billions.

Judging from my own mail, almost everybody has become a pundit on the Voice of America. This is a healthy sign. Even though some of the criticisms of the present operation seem to me ill-informed nearly everybody says he wants to see an enlarged and more effective operation. Public reaction is based on the sound instinct that without a successful psychological operation all our armaments and bombs cannot win us the peace and security we Americans seek.

The Senate gave some indication of its attitude last summer when it approved supplementary appropriations which were more than double the regular appropriation, although in my judgment the appropriation approved, which was a pre-Korean request by the State Department and which was not revised after Korea, was far below the need.

The question then was, and is now, not whether we need an expanded and improved operation. The question then was, and still is, How do we get it?

To help provide the answer to this urgent and crucial question, I am herewith submitting, on behalf of myself and the senior Senator from Wisconsin, a new resolution which calls for a study and investigation by a committee of the Senate. I shall read the key portion of the resolution which I herewith send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations and request that the resolution in full be then printed in the RECORD:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof duly designated by the chairman of such committee, in conjunction with two other Senators designated by the President of the Senate, shall conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to—

(A) The objectives, operations, and effectiveness of existing foreign information programs conducted by the Department of State and other civilian agencies of the United States.

(B) The prompt development of techniques, methods, and programs for greatly expanded and far more effective operations in this vital area of foreign policy.

(C) The extent and scope of organization and of reorganization of existing departmental and agency structures which may be necessary or desirable to accomplish the foregoing objectives in the present world crisis.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) submitted by Mr. BENTON (for himself and Mr. WILEY), was received, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed entire in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the first weapon of aggression by the Kremlin is propaganda designed to subvert, to confuse, and to divide the free world, and to inflame the Russian and satellite peoples with hatred for our free institutions, and

Whereas the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers in Europe has just reported to Congress that the security of the free world requires not only military and economic strength but a psychological offensive in behalf of our democratic principles and aspirations; and

Whereas General Eisenhower called for a great expansion in our campaign of truth which would give enormous moral strength to all other phases of our foreign policy—military, diplomatic, and economic; and

Whereas the international propagation of the democratic creed should be made an instrument of supreme national policy: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof duly designated by the chairman of such committee, in conjunction with two other Senators designated by the President of the Senate, shall conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to—

(A) The objectives, operations, and effectiveness of existing foreign information programs conducted by the Department of State and other agencies of the United States.

(B) The prompt development of techniques, methods, and programs for greatly expanded and far more effective operations in this vital area of foreign policy, including the following, among others:

(1) Maximum utilization of radio broadcasting, by medium wave as well as shortwave, to overcome barriers of language, censorship, distance, and other obstacles to reaching the minds of the peoples of the world.

(2) Development of a comprehensive world-wide program to produce and exhibit documentary and educational motion pictures.

(3) Significant and immediate expansion of our program for people-to-people diplomacy, through exchange of students, industrial and technical experts, as well as representatives of cultural, labor, and religious groups.

(4) Use of all other practicable techniques and media to reach and inform people who are shut off from the free world by censorship and suppression.

(5) Promotion of democratic education abroad, including the occupied areas of Germany and Japan.

(6) Increased coordination with international information programs of other free nations.

(7) Maintenance, through the United Nations and through our own diplomacy, of a steady and steadily increasing pressure in behalf of world-wide freedom of information.

(8) Increased support and development of and coordination with the United Nations and its appropriate specialized agencies, facilities, and programs.

(9) Further encouragement of nongovernmental agencies to help inspire and guide the efforts of the millions of private American citizens who might use their talents and resources and contacts overseas in furtherance of the programs and objectives of this resolution.

(C) The extent and scope of organization and of reorganization of existing departmental and agency structures which may be necessary or desirable to accomplish the foregoing objectives in the present world crisis.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations for necessary appropriations or legislation as it may deem desirable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to employ on a temporary basis such technical, clerical, or other assistants as it deems desirable. The necessary expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, this proposed study by a Senate committee would focus mainly on three questions: the scale and scope of the operation which is needed, on its needed manpower and facilities and funds, and on its proper placement within the executive branch of the Government. The study would give the State Department full opportunity to report its progress, which in the past year under the leadership of Assistant Secretary Barrett has been most notable. The study would review where we have been, where we are, and where we think we are going. It could explore what other countries are doing on this psychological and propaganda front. It could examine our own deficiencies and develop bold and constructive plans to remedy them. And it could, for the first time by any committee of the Congress, do justice to the troublesome problem of organization of our executive departments for the best handling of this new and critical area so vital to the conduct of our foreign policy.

Mr. President, I shall devote the remainder of my speech to the question of the proper placement within the Government of the administration of our international information and education programs. Should it remain within the State Department; and, if it should not, how might it better be set up? This subject has not hitherto been discussed on the floor of the Senate or, as far as I know, in any committee.

The Hoover Commission studied this problem and its findings reflected a fundamental uncertainty. The Commission agreed on the principle that the Department of State should not be burdened with major operating responsibilities and that its proper role was policy formulation and the coordination of the manifold foreign interests of many executive agencies. Applying this principle, the so-called task force which appraised the State Department recommended that the international information and educational exchange programs should be taken out of the Department. It suggested that the information program be transferred to a specially-created Government corporation. This proposal followed a pattern I had proposed while I was in the State Department as Assistant Secretary. In 1946 I sent a bill to the Hill calling for the establishment of what I called the International Broadcasting Foundation, with an independent board of trustees to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Coordination with the State Department was to be partially insured by the membership on this board of the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs.

The Hoover Commission task force further suggested that the educational exchange program of the State Department be transferred to the Federal Security Agency, presumably in the Office of Education.

The Hoover Commission itself, reviewing the findings of its task force reversed these two particular recommendations, but it did so with words which were most hesitant. Let me quote the Commission's language:

In two instances—

The two being the information and the educational programs—

it appears that operational responsibility, for the present at least, must remain in the State Department in default of any other satisfactory location in the executive branch.

I may say in passing that I unequivocally agree that the Office of Education is not a satisfactory location.

Now, when the Commission used this phrase, "for the present, at least," it was referring to a present of 2 years ago, to a time when the international crisis was far less acute than it is today, and when the information and education operation was a relatively minor aspect of the State Department's work, with only about one-fourth the appropriations now available. And I think I have made it clear that I feel the present operating appropriations are only a fraction of what they should be.

Now, the Commission's phrase, "in default of any other satisfactory location" was made at a time when many felt that the umbrella of the State Department was necessary to keep the Voice of America not only dry behind the ears but actually with the breath of life in its body.

Today the importance of the program is almost universally conceded, and it seems inevitable that it is due for a great further expansion. Therefore, it is not only reasonable but imperative to ask whether a better job can now be done with independent status, let us say as the ECA has had independent status.

I do not want to be misunderstood on this point, and it is hard to make the point without being misunderstood. I admire the present Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, Mr. Edward W. Barrett, and I was one of those who recommended him for the post. I am proud of the job he has done since his appointment last year. I know and admire many of Mr. Barrett's key subordinates, some of whom served under me in the Department. His two top men, Howland Sargeant and Charles Hulten, are two of the ablest executives I know. My argument is that we need many, many more like them, or as nearly like them as we can find: we need personnel in this area comparable to the best of the armed services, of the ECA, or of the Cabinet or subcabinet. Can the present subordinate role in the lower reaches of the State Department offer the right challenge and opportunity to the best communications people in the country? Or, if it does not, how can it be made to offer such a challenge? To this problem the State Department top officers have had little time to devote themselves.

Secretary Acheson wrote me the other day that before the end of the current fiscal year there will be 10,615 people working in the Department's information and education program. He added that the President's budget for fiscal 1952 calls for a 45-percent expansion over 1951 levels. Thus he seemingly aims to have more than 13,000 people—something approaching half the total personnel of the State Department and the Foreign Service—reporting to one Assistant Secretary of State. I remind you that there are eight Assistant Secretaries of State, and, in the organization chart of the Department, there are six or eight officers who outrank the Assistant Secretaries. Such a tail could well begin to try to wag even such a dog as the State Department. Or worse—and more likely—the tail will be lucky to get even one eighth of the dog's attention.

I repeat that I am not objecting to the size of this projected force. Far from it. It is about the size of one cut-down Army division. But many of these 13,000 people will be top creative people. Their work cannot readily be reduced to routine, as it is, for example, in the post office. The best of them will be people who respond to imaginative leadership. Can they get such inspiration under the present type of set-up?

We in the United States are the most communications-minded people in the world. We are proud of our achievements in this field. But as I have often said, we are amateurs in the field of international propaganda—amateurs in a world of professionals. We have never applied ourselves to this international field. We have potential talent but the will to utilize it has been lacking. In New York or Chicago or Los Angeles alone there are hundreds of outstanding men and women in education, in publishing, in journalism, broadcasting, motion pictures, public relations, and yes, in advertising, who can contribute to this enterprise, and who now only await the leadership. They would face unfamiliar kinds of problems; but under experienced direction they can learn what they need to know about foreign relations far faster than a foreign affairs expert can learn how to communicate to large groups of people.

Let me add that by communication leaders I do not mean only those from the mass media. The labor movement has produced many great communicators and there are none more effective abroad in combating totalitarian ideologies. We must learn to utilize the enormous contribution that the voice of religion can make to the Voice of America. We have a great ideological asset in our foreign language groups, and in their publications. And are we making use of the remarkable communication talents in our universities and our civic groups?

I suggest that there are three organizational patterns—and doubtless variations on these will be brought forward—which our proposed Senate survey will want to consider.

First, and most obvious, of course, is to keep the program where it is. I do not discount this possibility. Let me discuss the arguments of its proponents under four headings.

First, there is a current argument that any change would cause confusion and delay at a critical time. This is an argument that could be leveled against any reorganization or proposed step forward. For example, the unification of the armed services, or currently, the establishment of the emergency production and control agencies.

Secondly, there is the argument that the State Department must directly control operations so that it can exercise close policy supervision over the output—shifting its propaganda emphasis, if necessary, from day to day in the light of fresh intelligence, of new appraisals, and changing tactics. This is a weightier argument than the first one, but not decisive. In the first place, it ignores the need for strong and forceful representation to the political officers of the viewpoint of top experts in the field of communications. In the second place, can it not be resolved by a system of close liaison, such as the State Department maintains with other operating agencies of the Government?

Thirdly, there is the argument that the presence of information specialists within the State Department exercises a healthy corrective influence on the policy-formulation activities of the career diplomats who are more accustomed to dealing with foreign diplomats than with the foreign policies behind them. Yes; there is good point in this—if enough of the right men are in the Department. A major test of any foreign policy is whether it can be explained persuasively to large numbers of people abroad. And that is often a question for the expert judgment of professionals in the field of communications.

This would, however, be a far more important point if anyone proposed to eliminate, or transfer, the office of the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs. I know of no such proposal. Under the Hoover reorganization plan, which created a general manager for Voice of America operations, the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs and his immediate staff were to be freed to concentrate on policy matters, and to advise the Secretary of State on public-opinion questions. This is as it should be, and need not be changed if actual operations are removed from the Department. Indeed, if operations are removed the Assistant Secretary's role as a policy officer will be even more sharply clarified. Further he would become the key liaison with any newly constituted outside agency.

Fourthly, there is the question of the relation of the information program's field operations abroad to our Embassies and legations. I believe it is a sound principle—which should be more rigorously applied—that our Ambassadors and Ministers, as representatives of the President, should coordinate all official interests of the United States in the countries to which they are assigned. The field operations of the information and education program should continue to be coordinated by the chiefs of mission in each country, even though the home organization were to be separated from the State Department.

There are other arguments against a separation, but the foregoing seem to be the principal four.

Now what of the arguments in favor of separation? They seem to me to be powerful.

My experience, including my experience with the State Department, makes me feel the evidence favors the separation, but I do not exclude the possibility that the proposed Senate study may bring out ways to achieve the seeming advantages, without the necessity for a separate operating unit.

But of this I am sure. If operations are to remain in the State Department, then a way must be found to bring into the Government, perhaps as a psychological strategy board reporting to the National Security Council, an independent group, including top leaders from the communications field, and from labor, education, and religion, to infuse fresh ideas and new vigor into the operations. A somewhat similar idea, to achieve correlation among Government agencies, has already been suggested to me by Assistant Secretary Barrett as a possible alternative to a separate operating agency.

Our Government, I am told, is the only one in the world today in which international propaganda operations, as distinct from policy, are concentrated in the foreign office. In the case of Britain, which has had far more experience in this field than we, the overseas broadcasting, the most important arm of Britain's international information program, is conducted by the BBC—that is, it is conducted, among other things, by trained broadcasters. The BBC's liaison with the Foreign Office is subtle. The Foreign Office of course not only has a veto power, which never needs to be overtly used, but also has a directive power—a power keyed to those British subtleties little known to the marbled halls of Washington. Britain's cultural relations with other nations are conducted by another operating organization separate from the Foreign Office but wholly responsive to it—the British Council, an agency financed chiefly by the Government.

Even the Russians, I understand, carry on their foreign broadcasts through a broadcasting agency separate from their foreign office. Propaganda is of course a principal preoccupation of the Politburo, and the propaganda line comes straight out of the Communist Party to all Government agencies. I call your attention to Marshal Stalin's own piece of pure unadulterated propaganda of last Friday. I suspect the broadcasters get the line first, and the Foreign Office follows the broadcasting rather than the other way around.

The first and most important argument for pulling out of our State Department the Voice of America and kindred activities is the one I have already intimated: the seemingly greater chance to bring into this operation the best brains and talent in the country. The presently contemplated 13,000-man operating force will be larger than the combined full-time staffs of the Associated Press, the National Broadcasting Co., and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It is now inconceivable that a single Assistant Secretary—no matter how able he may be—could bring into the echelons ranged under him the top news and creative talent available in any one of those companies.

I know full well that the Government can never compete with private business, in salary terms, for the services of the outstanding men in the communication field. But I know also that it can attract them if their work is given the recognition and status it deserves.

While most of the political officers in the State Department have now accepted the so-called Voice of America program, and many would surely now resist having it reorganized out of the Department, I shall not forget the distress in 1945 of some of these men, who are top professionals in their own way, and who as craftsmen had been trained to labor for days to get the proper wording of a note to a foreign government, when they realized the Voice of America had been transferred to the State Department and was pumping out 250,000 or more words a day, for foreign consumption, in the name of the State Department.

The wholly natural—and traditional—attitude within the Department was not conductive to getting too creative men or holding them. Still today, you may look in vain for chiefs of mission—ministers or ambassadors—who have come from the information area of the Department or who are specialists in the field of communications. The OIAA and OWI contained many men of stature. Few have been called back into top roles in the Department. This is not deliberate prejudice, not at all. It is wholly unconscious. It could not be otherwise. But the natural concomitant is that top men from the communications industry do not seek to enter the Department.

Partly because of the entrenched tradition within the Department, as well as the grave risks involved in embracing new gods, I subscribe to the basic principle which the Department has self-consciously maintained, and the Hoover Commission supported—that the Department of State should not take on major operating responsibilities.

General Marshall and Mr. Bernard Baruch reenunciated this principle clearly and unequivocally in the hearings last July on my Senate Resolution 243. Although the Armed Forces are our most important operating instrument of foreign policy, we would never consider placing their operations directly under the Secretary of State.

Similarly, when the Congress decided to launch the European Recovery Program, as a major operating instrument of foreign policy, it gave scarcely any consideration to the possibility of asking the State Department to operate this program; it set up a separate agency. Now the information and education program is in some ways an even more complex operating problem. Thus I am not prepared to accept without study, arguments that this program is an exception to the principle. Many of my colleagues here in the Senate have pressed upon me again and again the idea that separation is essential and that a new status must be devised. I have received hundreds of letters from policy leaders all over the country advocating such a change. It is partly in response to these pressures that I am today asking for this study.

The most obvious and oft-repeated suggestion is the creation of an independent agency reporting directly to the President, or to the President through the National Security Council. Such an agency would provide the recognition, the freedom and the flexibility for full development. With proper leadership, it could become a magnet for the best talent in the country.

This special agency is the second of the three organizational patterns which the committee should study. Many of its eager enthusiasts will settle for no less than full Cabinet status for such an agency. It would then have its own eight top officers with its own eight assistant secretaries. Acting under an administrator, such an agency would take over all or most of the prospective 13,000 people contemplated under the State Department program. It would take over all five of the present types of operation—broadcasting; news and publications; motion pictures; exchange of persons; and the servicing of United States information libraries, institutes, and exhibits overseas. It would share responsibility for the staffs in the field with the chiefs of mission.

Parenthetically, I hope my colleagues will note that my remarks today are directed wholly toward the organization and amplification of America's overt, straightforward, open-and-above-board information and education operations. They do not bear upon the intricate problems involved in psychological warfare or so-called black propaganda. These are the functions of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the theater commanders, and the CIA. These operations do not mix well with overt propaganda. Nevertheless I am aware that there is a range of possible actions, which might be called unconventional propaganda, between these two main types. We have heard of some of these unconventional approaches described on the floor of the Senate, for example, Senator FLANDERS' balloons; and my office mail contains many unorthodox suggestions, some of them ingenious. Incidentally, there is a strong presumption that an independent agency would be more likely than the State Department to have the staff, the resources, the imagination and the freedom to receive, to evaluate and to act upon such proposals.

One possible way to organize such an independent agency would be the creation by Congress, under the Government Corporation Control Act of 1945, of a wholly owned Government corporation, let us say under some such name as the International Information and Education Foundation.

Such a Government corporation is the third and last of the organizational patterns I suggest for study. This is the formula to which I referred previously, and which I sponsored in 1946 for our broadcasting only. It can readily be extended to the entire range of activities associated with the broadcasting. The board of trustees, or directors, should be nonpartisan, composed of outstanding citizens, notably from such fields as publishing, labor, religion, education, and communications. The chairman of the board, the only paid member, should serve as chief administrative officer. In my original proposal of 1946, there were to be two consultative committees, one representing other interested Government agencies and the other representing the broadcasting industry. Such a foundation, although necessarily financed largely by congressional appropriations, would also be a logical recipient for private donations.

This formula of a Government corporation with a board of directors from private life would have most of the advantages of the independent Government agency which is so widely advocated. It would have some alleged disadvantages, which were suggested to me by the Bureau of the Budget in my State Department days, and these should be reexamined, but it would have many great potential advantages.

Such a Government corporation should bring into positions of responsibility men of ability and prestige whose services would not ordinarily be available to the Government. It should, at least in some degree, reduce the taint of official propaganda which sometimes develops in the minds of foreign people against the emanations of a purely governmental agency. It should provide greater flexibility for cooperative efforts with the many private organizations working in this field than is possible for a line agency of Government. Finally, and perhaps most important, it should greatly enhance the confidence of our own people in the whole operation.

Mr. President, I have presented these three alternative patterns of organization at some length, not to anticipate the proposed committee's agenda, but to show that there is great substance to many questions to which the committee should devote itself. I have not argued further today about the contribution to the successful conduct of our foreign policy which the right kind and the right scale of operations in this area can make. I have, however, suggested that, if the understanding and the leadership the times require are to develop in this area, the Congress will have to help provide them.

The resolution I am submitting today on behalf of the senior Senator from Wisconsin and myself, is, I feel, a major step toward securing both the requisite understanding and leadership. Because both are so urgently required in this time of crisis, I hope hearings on this resolution can be held very shortly to be followed by any indicated recommendations for legislation and appropriations.

Mr. President, there are few questions both so urgent and so important to which the Congress can now address itself.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I ask to have inserted at this point in my remarks the news story published in the New York Times a few days ago under the headline "Exiles from Soviet bloc proclaim principles for a liberated Europe." I read an extract from the declaration of principles:

The free world is the bearer of a political idea which it must share with all peo le eager to rally in a great and just cause; it is now for the United States of America, the Nation which marches at the head of the line, to speak the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXILES FROM SOVIET BLOC PROCLAIM PRINCIPLES FOR A LIBERATED EUROPE

PHILADELPHIA, February 11.—A declaration of independence by European exiles from communism was proclaimed today at the birthplace of the document that had inspired it.

More than 200 persons from 10 countries under Communist dictatorship met at Independence Hall and endorsed a Declaration of the Aims and Principles of Liberation of the Central and Eastern European Peoples.

At the same site nearly 175 years ago, the founders of the refugees' adopted "home of the free" signed the United States Declaration of Independence.

The gist of the declaration was set forth in 10 principles of liberation based on the concept that the suppression of freedom in one part of the world endangers the freedom of all nations and of all men.

Lasting world peace and democratic stability cannot be achieved, the document said, until the shackles of Russian mastery have been struck from the captive peoples behind the iron curtain.

On the premise that those peoples had been subjugated by the same Soviet Communist aggressor, the declaration said that they deserved to be defended with the same determination as that with which the United Nations is defending the freedom and independence of the Korean people.

Purporting to speak for an overwhelming majority of 120,000,000 people in Communist domains, the group of exiles advocated a European federation modeled after the United States in ideals and in structure.

The ceremony marking formal issuance of the document was held at noon on the paved plaza outside the main entrance of Independence Hall. It was arranged by the National Committee for a Free Europe, Inc., but the committee spokesmen said that the declaration originated with an informal group of expatriates, most of them former leaders in their homelands, who call themselves the Tuesday Panel.

The Panel has been meeting regularly in New York for 2 years at the home of Grigore Gafencu, former Rumanian minister for foreign affairs and envoy to Moscow.

Among other important figures in the exile "colony" whose names were announced as signers of the declarations were Mgr. Bela Varga, president of the Hungarian National Council and former speaker of the Hungarian Parliament; Dr. Peter Zenkl, former vice premier of Czechoslovakia; Dr. Georgi M. Dimitrov, chairman of the Bulgarian National Council, Washington, and Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, chairman of the International Peasant Union and former Premier of Poland.

After the exiles who had come here for the occasion had been introduced to the principals in the old Continental Congress building on the west side of Independence Hall, the outdoor exercises began in sunny but freezing weather.

Men and women of diverse nationalities listened attentively as the aims of the Declaration were explained by Joseph C. Grew, former United States Ambassador to Japan, and C. D. Jackson, former publisher of Fortune magazine. They are chairman and president, respectively, of the National Committee for a Free Europe.

"This demonstration is the first time since the evil day descended upon these countries that exiles have voluntarily banded together as a show of unity," Mr. Jackson said.

The declaration then was read in English by several exiles in rotation and was recorded for broadcast by the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe, a mobile station operated by the committee on Western Germany to send democracy's message behind the iron curtain.

During the reading, the exiles signed an illuminated scroll recording their endorsement of the declared. Monsignor Varga was the first signer, Alexander F. Kerensky, exiled head of Russia's first revolutionary regime, also signed.

The final event was the transfer of the declaration, with more than 200 signatures, to Dr. Edward M. Riley, historian of the Independence National Historical Park, for safekeeping in his office until eventual display of the document at the shrine.

The hour-long curbside ceremony was followed by a luncheon at the nearby Benjamin Franklin Hotel, where the principal speakers were Mr. Grew, Monsignor Varga, Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Malcolm W. Davis, executive associate of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Mr. Grew praised the authors of the proclamation and predicted that the principles of the declaration will guide the remaking of their homelands once they are freed of Bolshevik domination.

SIGNERS NAMED

The announced list of signers of the proclamation adopted by the exiles included:

Albania: Nuci Kotta, member of the National Committee for Free Albania, and Xhevat Kalajxhi, journalist.

Bulgaria: Dimitar Matzankiev, member of the Bulgarian National Council, former member of Parliament; Gen. Alexander Todorov; Luben Vichegorov, Metropolitan Opera singer; and Kiril Z. Fournadjeiv, fellow of the Mid-European Studies Center.

Czechoslovakia: Dr. Stefan Osusky, former Cabinet member and former Minister to Paris; Vaclav Majer, Dr. Josef Cerny, Dr. Jozef Lettrich and Dr. Hubert Ripka, all former Cabinet members, and Dr. Jan Papanek, former Ambassador and chief delegate to the United Nations.

Estonia: Kaarel Robert Pusta, former Foreign Minister and Ilmar Raamot, former Minister of Agriculture.

Hungary: Ferenc Nagy, former Premier; Tibor Eckhardt, former chairman of the Smallholders Party; Zoltan Pfeiffer, chairman Hungarian Freedom Party; Charles Peyer, chairman, Social Democratic Party; Dr. Bela Fabian, former member of Parliament; Msgr. Joszef Kozi-Horvath, chairman Christian Democratic movement, and George Bessenyey, member, Hungarian National Council.

Latvia: Julius Feldmans, Minister to Washington; Alfred Berzins, former Cabinet member and Voldemars Lambergs, member of the Latvian Central Committee.

Lithuania: P. Zadeikis, Minister to Washington, and Vaclovas Sidzikauskas, former Minister to Germany.

Davila, former Rumanian Minister to Washington; Emil Ghilezan, former Under-Secretary of State; Brutus Coste, former Charge d'Affaires in Washington, and Dr. Augustin Popa, former Member of Parliament.

Yugoslavia: Dr. Vladko Macek, former Vice Premier and now chairman Croat Peasant Party; Dr. Milan Gavrilovic, former Ambassador to Moscow; Constantin Fotic, former Ambassador to Washington; Dr. Miha Krek, former Vice Premier; Ivan Mestrovic, sculptor; Dr. Slobowan Drashkovic, member of the Serbian Central National Committee, and Dr. Bogdan Radica, history professor and writer.

TEXT OF LIBERATION DECLARATION BY EXILES FROM COMMUNIST LANDS

PHILADELPHIA, February 11.—Following is the text of a Declaration of the Aims and Principles of Liberation of the Central and Eastern European Peoples, as adopted today by exiles from 10 countries, at ceremonies outside Independence Hall:

I

Whereas the peace ardently desired by the peoples of the whole world requires conditions of order and justice;

These times of great trouble will persist in the world so long as peoples aspiring to liberty are kept in isolation from the free world and in slavery;

This trouble prevails particularly in Europe, where the peoples, brutally separated from each other by an arbitrary will, see the ancient ties, both spiritual and material, ties formed by history and a common civilization, severed between them;

This division in Europe keeps the west in a continual state of insecurity and weakness depriving the countries that are still free of conditions indispensable to well-being and to the reestablishment of strength;

This division isolates the countries of Eastern Europe and, despite their aspirations and natural tendencies, confines them against their will in the sphere subjected to Soviet communism;

Whereas the isolation of an entire part of Europe can be maintained only by constraint and terror exercised equally against nations and individuals;

The nations held prisoners in an enemy camp are arrayed against the west as the advance guard of the new aggression which is being prepared;

Individuals, tortured in mind and in body, must suffer an unnatural warping of their spirit by a despotic rule, or perish.

In the domain of fact, the Communist experiment is doomed to failure; the economy of a country subjected to incessant levies, deprived of its markets and its natural outlets, moves toward catastrophe; the social order succumbs under a dictatorship which obolishes liberty of thought, creativeness, research, and enterprise, deprives the peasant of his land, the worker of the product of his labor, separates the child from the customs, faith, education, and patriotic inspiration of his parents, and denies to an entire category of citizens the right of life.

In the domain of the spirit, the pitiless struggle of communism against man leads to the debasement of the human being; in spite of the heroic resistance of our martyrs, to whom we render a tribute of deep emotion, our most precious heritage and our highest values, the very groundwork of our civilization, must suffer outrage and violence from a hostile mentality; in the systematic spreading of moral confusion, with no distinction between good and evil; the only law is an immense and brazen falsehood.

Under cover of a treacherous system of thought, designed to gain command of the mass mind but incapable of fulfilling its promises, obscure forces are at work, hostile to the entire world, whose only aim is to exercise absolute and limitless power; the exercise of this power becomes an end in itself, with the world as its victim; and the unlawful occupation of the Eastern European countries is the starting point for new conquests.

II

Whereas, moreover, the dangerous process of disintegration which threatens to extend over all Europe cannot be checked without restoring a rule of liberty to the countries in the east; and these countries are worthy of such a rule, having fought through centuries on the front lines of Europe to win freedom for themselves and for the Continent;

The word "liberty" has gained heightened meaning and new value through the sufferings endured by these countries, sustaining their peoples in hope of the deliverance for which they long with all their hearts;

And whereas such a deliverance calls for a great effort of constructive organization fired by a creative urge; this effort must aim at the liberation of man as well as nations; the liberation of man must restore his natural rights—fundamental, inalienable, not to be proscribed, but protected in their very finality against the abuses of power and the interference of public authority; this liberation, concentrated by legal guaranties of a national and international order, must deliver man from the fear that has permeated his being and give back his indispensable sense of physical and spiritual security; the freedom thus assured must be the essential element in the formation of states, and of those ties which are destined to draw more and more closely together the commonwealth of man;

The freeing of the nations must put an end to unlawful dominion by any alien power acting through the intermediary of servile government imposed and maintained by violence;

It must restore to the people their right of adopting freely the laws and institutions of their choice, so that the just power of governments shall derive from the consent of the governed;

Further, it must provide means for remedying as promptly as possible the social ills produced by Communist rule, which has created a much sharper social division than existed before between ruled and rulers; between the mass of half-starving and downtrodden people and a small upper ruling group, politically and economically privileged and self-perpetuating, which wields power of life and death unrestrained by any civil or moral law; this deadly distinction must be abolished;

And whereas the reconstruction of Eastern Europe involves problems of a political, economic, and social order beyond the capabilities and powers of nations to resolve separately; the dangers to which they remain exposed have prepared them to seek salvation through union; this tendency toward close international collaboration is in harmony with the present order of events; the federal principle, signifying union in liberty and implying the creation of organic ties, is the most appropriate and sure means of uniting the states; the peoples of the east are resolved to apply this principle to the regional organization which they envisage; these same peoples proclaim their right and their desire to take part in a United Europe on a federal basis, which they regard as the realization of all their prayers; and in spirit these continental and regional unions signify further steps along the road to the indispensable organization of the free world as a whole.

The desire for security

The great movement which carries the people of the east toward union springs likewise from a desire for security, from their need of opposing unitedly the menace of any totalitarian dictatorships whatsoever and of preventing any imperialist power from subordinating their countries to its will—as happened with Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia.

Consequently the peoples of the east feel themselves brothers not only to all the free nations of the west but also to the Russian people and all the other peoples of the Soviet Union aspiring to a common deliverance.

III

And whereas, finally, continents, like men, are related to each other, and in the sense of the words spoken by the great American, Abraham Lincoln, whose memory we honor at this time, the world cannot live half free and half slave;

The principles written into the Atlantic Charter could assure peace to the world under conditions of order and freedom; the present crisis results from the fact that certain of these principles have been abandoned; to cope with this crisis, and with the grave disorder provoked by the division of the world, there is no better way than to return to these principles and to restore to the Charter its original authority; in order to bring about this restoration it is necessary to possess a definite program and real strength;

The people of the United States of America, conscious of the mission before them, have resolutely given leadership to the free world in order to create, through new efforts and sacrifices, the preponderant strength able to assure a just and durable peace;

The free world is the bearer of a political idea which it must share with all people eager to rally in a great and just cause; it is now for the United States of America, the Nation which marches at the head of the line, to speak the word; here where the representative of the people, in a time of revolution against autocracy and in touch with the most enlightened minds of the Western World, once gathered to inspire the constitution of a free people, and where the wisdom of a free people with authority gained from glorious experience can restore to the world, in a time more infinitely troubled, the belief in liberty;

IV

Now, therefore, we exiles from Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, loyally united and single in thought, dedicated by the profound sufferings and the high aspirations of our native lands;

Faithful to the example of predecessors who, in the course of centuries, have forged, in exile but in contact with the free world, the framework of the institutions, the laws, the liberties of their countries.

The principles of liberation

Wish to send from the great Republic of the United States of America, where we have the good fortune to see the forces of freedom assembling, a message of confidence to our far-away peoples; and

To proclaim solemnly together the principles and aims of liberation:

1. All men and all nations are endowed by their Creator with an inalienable right to liberty. The cause of freedom is, like the cause of peace, one and indivisible. The suppressor of freedom in one part of the world endangers the freedom of all nations and of all men.

2. The principles of law and liberty embodied in the Atlantic Charter offer solid foundation for just peace in our time. Therefore, as an earnest of the determination in the free world to replace lawlessness and tyranny now rampant, with liberty under law, there must be a return to the principles of the Charter.

3. The world can have no peace so long as no real peace reigns in Europe. This cannot be achieved so long as that continent is sundered in two. The iron curtain divides Europe into halves which are vitally necessary to each other. In the eastern half a ruling group irresponsible to the will of its own people is forging powerful arms for an aggressive war. Liberation of central and eastern Europe is therefore a condition essential to the establishment of international democratic order, justice and lasting peace.

Having been violated by the same Soviet Communist aggressor, the freedom and independence of our peoples deserve to be defended with the same determination as that with which the United Nations is defending the freedom of the Korean people.

4. The great powers cannot achieve their purpose of safeguarding Western Europe if they base their endeavors upon a recognition, even implied, of the present enslavement of Central and Eastern Europe. Let the free world give to the oppressed peoples of Eastern and Central Europe at every possible opportunity assurance that its purpose is to bring the principles of the Atlantic Charter into effect in their unhappy lands. It is for the free world to demand that all further deportations from our countries cease, that prisoners of war and persons deported from their homes be repatriated immediately, that all Soviet troops and foreign police units be withdrawn, and that all political prisoners wherever they are held be set free. The deliberate destruction of the best in our nations, steadily pursued, must be stopped. The first goal is the establishment of democratic governments and the holding of free elections under effective international supervision.

5. All our peoples, from the Baltic to the Black and Adriatic Seas, from the Iron Curtain into the heart of the Russian lands, anxiously await action that would herald their approaching liberation. They are confident that the spiritual and material forces gathering under the leadership of the United States of America are capable of establishing a peace based on freedom and justice. Despite its impressive military might, the ruthless power confronting the free world is undermined by hatred and latent revolt among the peoples it oppresses. Their contribution to the fight for freedom can lead to decisive results only if it is related to positive and determined action by the free world.

6. The peoples of Central and Eastern Europe are firmly resolved, upon their liberation, to join the community of free nations and to establish government of the people, by the people, and for the people. The right of habeas corpus, as well as freedom of religion, freedom of research, and artistic creation, freedom of opinion and of information, freedom of assembly, among other essential freedoms, and fundamental political and social rights, shall be assured. No one shall be barred from education because of national origin, religious or political belief, or social and economic circumstances. Parents shall have the right to send children to such schools as they may establish or choose. There shall be special care for the oncoming generation of the young, who have a right to the widest opportunities to use their enthusiasm and capacity in building a better new order of society. The machine of mutual extermination shall no longer roll through our countries. Crimes against humanity shall be dealt with through the regular process of justice and on grounds of personal responsibility for definite acts. Eastern European democracy cannot be revived through vengeance. "Thou shall not kill" is the basic commandment for us.

7. The movement of ideas and persons, goods and services shall be free. Individual initiative shall be stimulated. Choice between private and public enterprise should be determined on the basis of merit; those methods which can produce better results both for consumers and workers, should have preference.

There shall be no more iron curtains. Our countries shall again be integrated into the world economy and be able to raise their standard of living and add their contribution to general welfare.

8. The land shall be owned by the peasant as his private property in accordance with the desire of the whole peasantry, which forms a major part of our populations and the backbone of our nations. Cooperatives and other forms of association voluntarily entered into by the peasants for economic ends shall be free from government interference. Advanced scientific methods and modern implements will help to raise the standard of living of the rural and urban populations.

9. The workers, manual and intellectual, shall be protected against exploitation whether by private or by public enterprise and shall be free from the fetters of arbitrary and competitive forced standards in work as from repressive labor laws. They shall be free to choose their employment and the places where they wish to live and work. Free and independent trade unions and organizations shall be the guardians of workers' rights and interests. There shall be responsibility on the part of the public authorities and private administrators that technological and scientific resources be employed to increase output and improve levels of living. The workers shall be entitled to a just share in the profits earned by their industries. Before the interest of the machines comes the interest of man.

10. The peoples of Central and Eastern Europe are eager to take their natural place in the great movement of free peoples toward better relationship and closer union. They are desirous of establishing among themselves strong ties of a federal character and of joining in the formation of a United Europe. Such a fraternal federation must prize and respect the distinctive values of each nation, for the common good of our European civilization and for the cultural heritage of mankind throughout the world.

Our belief in the need of close and loyal cooperation has prompted us to come forward with this joint declaration. We pledge ourselves to remain faithful to this belief after liberation.

In this great country, where the idea of liberty is so closely bound to that of union, we pray God to give us the strength we need to bring to a successful outcome the fight for the freedom and the union of our nations.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1946 RELATING TO FISCAL REQUIREMENTS OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the bill which I introduced earlier today for appropriate reference is entitled "A bill to amend the legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, to provide for more effective evaluation of fiscal requirements of the executive branch of the Government of the United States."

This measure is a revised version of S. 2898, the budget bill I introduced in the Senate during the Eighty-first Congress.

The main purpose of this legislation is to provide much-needed improvement in congressional control over the expenditures of the executive branch of the Government. It is the constitutional responsibility of the Congress to appropriate funds needed for the support of all branches of the Federal Government. That responsibility, Mr. President, in this period of our national existence, and under the conditions of stress that now obtain, imposes a duty on the Congress to appropriate only as much, but no more, than is actually necessary.

Under our practice and procedure the President of the United States submits to the Congress an annual budget of all proposed expenditures of the various departments and agencies of the executive branch of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year. The items and the amounts in the President's budget constitute his recommendations and requests of the Congress for appropriations for the specific amounts and purposes indicated. The Congress is not duty-bound to follow the President's recommendations, nor to make all of the specific appropriations that he requests. However, budget requests and recommendations of the President carry great weight, and tremendously influence the Congress in its policies and in making appropriations for the operating cost of government and the servicing of governmental programs. Marked deference and respect are given the President's budget, and it is generally followed by the Congress in appropriating for the operating expenses of the Government. The Congress also accords to the President absolute good faith and sincerity with respect to the budget he submits and usually requires only a prima facie showing in support of items and amounts it contains.

Mr. President, under normal conditions the Congress might with reasonable safety continue its traditional policy of making appropriations for the expenses of the executive branch of the Government in line with the President's request. But conditions are not normal; they are extraordinarily abnormal. There are many warning signals of danger ahead, Mr. President. In the postwar peacetime period we have experienced almost astronomical increases in the operating cost of the Federal Government and in servicing new and expanded governmental programs. We have been either unable or unwilling, Mr. President, to keep a balanced budget and to hold expenditures within revenues.

Now, world dangers have compelled us to enter into a rearmament program in the interest of our own national defense and security. This program adds some thirty to forty billion dollars annually to our already burdensome costs of government, and may go as high as fifty to sixty billion dollars annually within the next 2 or 3 years. These extraordinary expenditures, Mr. President, make it necessary for us to greatly increase the existing heavy tax burden on our people. And however much we may increase the rate of taxes, Mr. President, and however much we may talk about pay as we go, it is highly improbable that this program can be supported on a pay-as-we-go basis. Thus, Mr. President, any deficits that are incurred will simply be added to and will pyramid the national debt, already around $260,000,000,000. The tremendous governmental expenditures that are envisioned and recommended in the President's pending annual budget of $72,000,000,000 add to the existing inflationary pressures on our economy. The more the Government spends and the larger its deficits become, the greater is the danger of inflation and economic disaster.

So, Mr. President, if there was ever a time in the history of our Republic when the Congress should exercise its full constitutional powers over the purse of this Nation, that time is now. If we are to avert economic disaster, the most rigid policies and practices of economy must be invoked. Each item in the President's budget should be examined and scrutinized with the view of eliminating it entirely or making a reduction in the amount thereof, if that can be done without serious injury to the necessary functions of Government and without impairing national defense.

The President's budget is made up from requests submitted to him by the various departments and agencies in the executive branch of Government. In the Office of the Bureau of the Budget there are more than 500 permanent employees who work all through the year with the various departments and agencies of the executive branch of the Government in the development of budget items and in preparing the budget of the President for submission to the Congress.

When the appropriations bills come before the Appropriations Committees of Congress, hearings are held and the representatives of the respective agencies of the executive branch of the Government appear before the committees and invariably support the budget that the President has submitted. It amounts, Mr. President, practically to an ex parte proceeding. The department or agency of Government seeking the appropriation without exception supports it and usually advises the Appropriations Committees that the amount requested is not only needed but is hardly adequate to meet its operating expenses. Not a single witness from the executive branch of the Government appears before the committees and gives adverse testimony to or in any way challenges the budget items or amounts requested.

The committees and the Congress who have the final responsibility, are, therefore, at a tremendous disadvantage. The Congress has not heretofore provided itself with adequate staff or facilities to scrutinize the budget, investigate and examine into the necessity for the items requested or the amount the department or agency seeks to have appropriated to it.

Presently the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has a professional and clerical staff of only 15 members, and the Appropriations Committee of the House has a staff of 40 members, a total of 55 staff members, Mr. President, for the Congress, as against more than 500 that we have provided for the Bureau of the Budget. Staff members of the Appropriations Committees are engaged in general routine committee work. They are not now authorized or empowered, Mr. President, to make investigations of the various agencies and departments and to examine into the economy and efficiency of their operations. They are not presently empowered, Mr. President, to be present at agency hearings conducted by the Bureau of the Budget. They have no opportunity to study the budget during its formulation and thus when hearings are held before the Appropriations Committees they are not equipped to advise and counsel with the committee with reference to the need for items in the budget or whether the amounts requested can be substantially reduced. Neither the committees nor the staffs of the committees are prepared to challenge the evidence submitted by representatives of the various agencies and departments in support of budget requests. Because the Congress has not equipped itself with facilities to study the budget during its preparation and to make investigations of the various departments with respect to their staffing and expenditures, the Appropriations Committees have little or no evidence to controvert that which is given to it by the interested parties.

Mr. President, the bill that I have introduced would establish a Joint Congressional Committee on the Budget composed of 10 Members, 5 from each of the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations to be chosen by those committees, 3 of whom would be Members of the majority party and 2 of the minority party. The joint committee would elect a chairman and vice chairman from among its Members and these two offices would alternate between the two Houses annually.

This joint committee would have several major duties. It would make studies and investigations on a year-round basis to equip itself with a full knowledge of the program and expenditures of the various agencies of Government. Second, it would furnish both the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations with adequate information to enable them to determine the fiscal requirements of each executive agency. Third, it would study governmental programs, changing economic conditions, and all available revenue estimates, including those of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. Fourth, on the basis of such studies, it would report its findings to the two Committees on Appropriations with recommendations for proposed changes in the annual supply bills. Fifth, it would recommend to the appropriate standing committees of each House changes in existing laws needed to bring about greater efficiency and economy in the Government. Finally, it would, upon its own initiative or upon the request of any standing committee of either House, report any deviations in the supply bills from basic legislative authorizations.

This joint committee would be empowered to employ an adequate expert staff and fix the compensation of its members. Such employees would be appointed without regard to their political affiliations and solely on the ground of fitness to perform their duties.

The bill further provides that the staff of the joint committee shall have the right to examine freely the budget of any Government agency within or without the District of Columbia, with the exception that the staff would have to have specific authorization from the joint committee for access to information classified for security purposes.

The joint committee would have power to require Government agencies to submit for its examination copies of the spending requests which they have made to the Bureau of the Budget, together with their detailed justifications in support thereof. In my judgment, such information may well prove vital to a full and adequate consideration of the fiscal requirements of many of the executive departments and agencies.

In order to promote close collaboration of the staffs of the Bureau of the Budget and the Joint Budget Committee, the staff of the joint committee is authorized to attend the hearings held by the Budget Bureau on departmental estimates. It also provides that qualified members of the staff of the Budget Bureau may be required to attend executive sessions of the Appropriations Subcommittees to explain the content and basis of proposed appropriations. This provision, I believe, represents an important improvement long needed to clear up many problems which cannot be, or at least will not be, fully covered in the huge budget document annually submitted by the President to the Congress.

Mr. President, it is not the intent or purpose of this proposed legislation to usurp any of the authority or duties of the Appropriations Committees of the Congress, but rather to implement, strengthen, and assist the Appropriations Committees in successfully meeting their full responsibility to the Congress and to the tax-burdened people of our Nation.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946—section 202b—the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses already have the authority to expand their separate staffs in order to make a more systematic and intensive analysis of departmental spending requests. But the Appropriations Committees have not fully availed themselves of this authority. If they should do so, Mr. President, if both the Appropriations Committee of the House and the Senate should adequately expand their present staffs to perform the services contemplated under the bill which I have introduced, we would simply create a duplication of service at double expense.

Therefore, in effect what I am proposing, Mr. President, is to create a joint committee and joint committee staff to serve both the House and the Senate Appropriations Committees and the Congress and to prevent a duplication of effort, service, and expense.

As I see this problem, Mr. President, it is one of tremendous importance, and there are only two approaches to its solution. One is by having each of the Appropriations Committees adequately expand its staff and confer additional authority and powers on the staffs of the two committees to perform these services. The other, Mr. President, is the approach made in the bill which I have introduced.

We cannot overemphasize the importance of doing something about this, Mr. President. We are told that we must tax the people until it hurts. We are advised that the President wants this Congress to provide additional taxes to the amount of sixteen and a half billion dollars annually. That will bring the annual Federal tax take up to approximately seventy billions of dollars. Even that astronomical amount, Mr. President, will likely be inadequate to meet governmental expenditures.

In this crisis of economic stress and strain, Mr. President, every possible economy must be effected. It is the duty of the President of the United States to submit to the Congress a budget containing only requests for appropriations that are absolutely necessary to operate the indispensable services of the Government. All other expenditures should be eliminated. If they are not eliminated in the President's budget, it is the duty of the Congress to eliminate them and refuse to make appropriations therefor. Every economy possible must be effected. It is the Congress and not the President who has the final responsibility for doing this. We must do the economizing by reducing expenditures, by cutting the President's budget. That is the only hope the people have for sound fiscal policies and the Congress dare not fail in doing its duty in that regard.

The President of the United States is reported by the press to have said that the $72,000,000,000 budget he has submitted to the Congress is a tight budget, and that he challenges the Congress to cut it. Mr. President, I believe every Member of Congress should in good faith accept this challenge. It is our patriotic duty and our duty as representatives of the people to reduce the President's budget if it contains items and requests that are not necessary and which can be dispensed with in this emergency. I believe there are such items in the budget and I intend to vote against appropriating money for them.

I believe if this Congress meets its responsibilities, considerable savings will result to the American people, and our expenditures for the next fiscal year will be some five or six billion dollars below the President's budget recommendations.

This bill which I have introduced, Mr. President, is in the nature of an amendment to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. In effect it would repeal section 138 of that act. I need not comment at length regarding the legislative budget that the section of the act attempted to establish. It has not worked. It is not effective and no effort now is being made by the Congress to comply with its provisions.

I am convinced, Mr. President, that this measure would at least offer a proper approach to the solution of this serious problem. It provides a basis for study and I shall undertake to have the committee to whom the bill may be referred hold public hearings on it at an early date, and I earnestly solicit suggestions and assistance from the membership of this body and from others interested in processing this legislation to final enactment.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCLELLAN. I move that the Senate now stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Wednesday, February 21, 1951, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate, February 19 (legislative day, January 29), 1951:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Charles E. Bohlen, of Massachusetts, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, to be Counselor of the Department of State, vice George F. Kennan.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

William Boyd Sloan, of Georgia, to be United States district judge for the northern district of Georgia, vice Robert L. Russell, elevated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

J. Saxton Daniel, of Georgia, to be United States attorney for the southern district of Georgia. He is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired February 18, 1951.

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

Col. John Hersey Michaelis, O20328, Army of the United States (major, U. S. Army), for temporary appointment as brigadier general in the Army of the United States under the provisions of subsection 515 (c) of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate Monday, February 19 (legislative day of January 29), 1951:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

John C. Williams to be United States attorney for the western district of South Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, grant that in this Brotherhood Week upon which we have entered we may resolve to covet and cultivate more earnestly the spirit of consideration and kindness toward all mankind.

May we be humbly grateful for the ability and the many opportunities, which are continually coming to us, to have a share in relieving the sufferings and hardships of the needy members of the human family.

Make us eager to extend the hand of helpfulness to the weary and heavy-laden and to speak the word of cheer to the sorrowing and lonely which will enable them to maintain their faith and their courage.

May we daily go forth on the journey of life with joy and hope, daring to believe in a future of great blessedness when men and nations everywhere shall live as brothers on the high levels of peace and good will.

Hear us in the name of our blessed Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 15, 1951, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Hawks, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Woodruff, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2141. An act to extend for 2 years the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad; and

H. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution amending section 5012 of the Internal Revenue Code.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States numbered 51–13.

INCREASED PAY OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, recently our office has been flooded with mail requesting our support of certain proposed legislation which will raise the pay of people working for certain branches of the Federal Government. No doubt all of you are also receiving many such letters.

I want to say at the outset that I want working people to be well paid, and I realize with the high cost of living and the inevitable increase in the tax burden that adjustments must be made from time to time. Not with the view of telling you how to answer your mail, but in the interest of what I believe to be best for the whole country, I hope that you will take the time to look into this whole picture before you make an unqualified commitment on this legislation. I am advised that if this legislation is enacted, the first year's cost will be over $350,000,000. It seems to me that the first thing we should do is get some more income for the Post Office Department, which is presently operating at a deficit of a half billion dollars. We can get this increased revenue through increased postal rates on second-, third-, and fourth-class matter if the Congress will do it. We did that in the House last session on a limited scale, but, of course, no action was taken in the other body.

The easiest way to answer letters from a large group wanting something is to simply write back and agree that you will help them get what they want. A number of Members did that during the Eighty-first Congress in connection with the order of the Postmaster General curtailing postal service. Then when legislation came up on the floor and we were faced with the actual fact of having to vote for or against the legislation and I entered into the fight to uphold the position of the Postmaster General, which I believed was correct, I had a number of Members tell me I was absolutely correct in my position; that they regretted they had previously committed themselves without realizing the full import of their commitment.

My purpose in taking this time today is simply to respectfully request of you that you give full consideration to the whole picture before committing yourself.

AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, we are working hard to build as fast as we can the strongest possible defense for this Nation and for the free world. I am persuaded that we must do all that is possible and necessary to that end.

In our efforts to guarantee national security and to prevent a third world war, we must exercise due care to protect the democratic institutions upon which the greatness of this Nation depends.

We should particularly do all that we can to strengthen the education of our youth. Our public schools are short of qualified teachers. Several million of our school-age population are not in school. The number in overcrowded classrooms and under unprepared teachers is yet larger.

Faced with increasing enrollments, the need for additional classrooms is critical. The United States Commissioner of Education, Earl J. McGrath, recently said that—

According to the best information now available, it is estimated that the country needs 250,000 public elementary and secondary classrooms and related facilities to relieve overcrowding, to eliminate half-day sessions, and to replace obsolete and unsafe school buildings.

At a time when the education of our youth looms with greater importance than ever before, we are faced with shortages of construction materials which, despite our best efforts, will inevitably handicap the proper education and training of our youth. I want to urge, therefore, that our national policy in allocating materials for school construction in these perilous times be as liberal as possible. The future security of the ways of freemen falls more heavily upon our youth than upon the youth of any other great world power. We must, therefore, do everything we can to prepare them for the successful discharge of this tremendous responsibility.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. WINSTEAD asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes today, following the special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on tomorrow, after the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. BURDICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes today, following the special orders heretofore entered.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order for tomorrow, the first one I have ever requested since I have been here, a little over 4 years. I do not contend or pretend at all that it will be a great speech or even that it will be a good speech, but it will be different.

I am going to speak on the subject of our foreign policy and war and peace. I am certainly no authority on this subject, but I have tried to put a little common sense and horse sense into the thoughts that I have been wrestling with and shall try to bring them to your attention tomorrow.

If you are not too busy and are not otherwise engaged I would sincerely appreciate your hearing what I have to say, because it will be different at least whether it is good or not.

REPUBLICAN OBJECTORS ON THE CONSENT AND PRIVATE CALENDARS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House I desire to announce as Republican objectors for the Eighty-second Congress on the Consent Calendar: Mr. CUNNINGHAM, Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin, and Mr. FORD.

On the Private Calendar the Republican objectors will be Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin, Mr. DOLLIVER, and Mr. HUNTER.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, as you and every Member of the House knows, our people are gravely concerned, not only about the world crisis but the growing tense domestic situation. I think most of them feel as I do that our foreign policy, if there is any, is badly muddled. It has brought only grief and higher taxes.

We have to provide an ironclad national defense for our own country. To a large extent this has been necessitated by our confused foreign policy. The Department of National Defense competing for goods has skyrocketed prices and greatly increased inflation in this country. Nothing real has been done about it by the administration. This affects all of our people, especially the low wage earner and the older people who are on fixed retirement income.

With our huge national debt we must tax to the limit for national defense and try to balance our budget. Our people are willing to pay taxes and make sacrifices if they know the money for national defense is not being wasted. The Government must practice austerity as well as the people. What makes us all mad is an expanding bureaucracy that squanders our money on socialistic schemes developed by the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

The country has lost confidence in the President and his Secretary of State. Under our system of Government a new administration cannot take over until January 1953. In the meantime, the people look to the Congress for leadership. Congress must cut the expense of Government to the bone. It will take courage. Politics must be forgotten. It is our responsibility and we must go ahead and assume it.

LET US GET GENERAL MacARTHUR'S VIEWS

Mr. SHEEHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEEHAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Congress an editorial written by Mr. John Knight in Saturday's Chicago Daily News.

In my opinion, the Democratic administration has been giving us biased views on our military problems. The Congress has heard Eisenhower's report on Europe, and Mr. Knight suggests a splendid idea: that we have a MacArthur report on Korea. Have MacArthur tell Congress the plain unvarnished facts about Korea.

With 50,000 casualties in Korea, our citizens do not know the true facts as to why we are fighting, except for the vague, nebulous idea of containing communism. General MacArthur has made remarks about diplomatic restrictions in his conduct of the war and, as Mr. Knight concludes:

After 8 months of diplomatic double talk about Korea, and for the sake of our sons in combat, it's time to find out or get out.

Mr. John Knight's editorial from the Chicago Daily News of Saturday, February 19, reads as follows:

BRING MacARTHUR HOME TO REPORT

Since we have had an Eisenhower report on Europe, how about a MacArthur report on Korea?

What greater service could General MacArthur perform for his country than to tell Congress and the people the plain, unvarnished facts about Korea?

His critics hint darkly that Mac wants to undertake an all-out war against the Chinese Reds. The accusation is false, but let MacArthur answer the question.

Let him outline his problems, amplify his remarks about diplomatic restrictions, and tell us what he would do, and when, if he were in a position of final authority.

It isn't only the kids in Korea who are confused. It's all of us.

The suspicion grows that the United States is being inextricably caught in the web of old-world diplomacy. This is a pattern of diplomacy which settles nothing permanently, nor makes more than a gesture toward reaching final and lasting agreements.

The American heritage is different. We knew what we were fighting for at Valley Forge, New Orleans, Missionary Ridge, and Manila Bay.

We thought we knew what we were fighting for at Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel, Bastogne, and Okinawa.

Are we as sure today about Seoul, Inchon, and Wonju?

Or our 50,000 casualties in Korea?

Are we satisfied to accept the view that the United States of America must send the flower of its youth to fight communism on every front, or will we insist that our objectives must be clearly defined so we will know the reason for and the price of our sacrifice?

While the thought of war is repugnant to all of us, no good American shrinks from the conflict if he knows why we're fighting and what we are attempting to achieve.

The situation in Korea is beclouded by the inconclusive vaporings of timid men at Lake Success and the Foggy Bottom pontifications of those sitting in the seats of the departed mighty at Washington.

Walter Lippmann hints that we have long since put aside the political objectives declared in the UN resolution of October 7—to establish by arms a unified, independent, and democratic government in Korea.

What, then, are our objectives? A military partition of Korea which would again divide that country into two spheres of influence?

What is the truth?

A personal report by MacArthur would either confirm or dispel our doubts. It is a story that no other man could tell.

After 8 months of diplomatic double-talk about Korea, and for the sake of our sons in combat, it's time to find out, or get out.

JOHN S. KNIGHT.

OUR SHIP OF STATE

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from the West.

I would suggest that we install a weathercock on the Capitol Dome to advise the leadership on the shiftings of favorable breezes. The mothers and fathers are disturbed. They would probably be more content if they could see her full sail set and the ship of state in motion, even though it were just running ahead of the so-called bipartisan wind. They think this administration knows neither how to box a compass or chart a safe course.

NONFEDERAL PUBLIC EMPLOYEES AND CONTROL OF WAGES

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of the House the fact that the New York State Legislature has memorialized the Congress to enact legislation exempting the employees of States and their localities from the provisions of any wage-stabilization order.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of concern to every Member of Congress, their respective States, and all of their local governments. Public employees throughout the country are likewise anxious to know whether or not wage controls apply to their compensations.

I find, on investigation, the basic act provides that no action shall be taken under its authority with respect to wages, salaries, and compensations inconsistent with any law of any State. Moreover, general regulation No. 4 of the Wage Stabilization Board authorizes increases to State and local government employees without prior Board approval, except that such increases are expected to conform with the national wage stabilization policy. In the light of the provisions of the basic act and general regulation No. 4, it is evident that the States and local governments have a right to make any salary adjustments that they may deem necessary and desirable.

Section 402 (d) (2) of title IV, Public Law 774 of the Eighty-first Congress, reads as follows:

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

Supplementing the provisions of this basic act, general regulation No. 4, adopted unanimously by the Wage Stabilization Board and issued on February 1, clarifies the exclusion of non-Federal public employees by authorizing such wage increases without prior Board approval, except that it calls for conformity with the national stabilization policy and possible review by the Board of any increases in compensation granted by the States and their political subdivisions. General regulation No. 4 reads, as follows:

NON-FEDERAL PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Pursuant to the defense Production Act of 1950 (Public Law 774, 81st Cong.), Executive Order 10161 (15 F. R. 6105), General Wage Stabilization Regulation 1 (16 F. R. 816) and Economic Stabilization Agency General Order

3 (16 F. R. 739), this general regulation 4 is hereby issued.

STATEMENT OF CONSIDERATIONS

This general regulation is issued by the Wage Stabilization Board in discharge of its responsibilities under the provisions of the Defense Production Act of 1950, Executive Order 10161, General Order 3 and General Wage Stabilization Regulation 1 of the Economic Stabilization Agency. It is designed to stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation and to effectuate the purposes and intent of said statute, orders, and regulation.

For the purpose of preparing itself for the discharge of its responsibilities, the Wage Stabilization Board heretofore distributed to representative labor and industry groups a series of questions, the answers to which would provide the Board with essential information for the development of wage stabilization policies. Thereafter, the Board conducted conferences which were attended by representative groups of labor and industry, which presented their views respecting the development of wage stabilization policies. In the formulation of the provisions hereof there has thus been consultation with industry and labor representatives, including trade association and labor union representatives, and consideration has been given to their recommendations.

Sec.

1. Increases in wages of non-Federal public employees authorized.
2. Increases in wages of non-Federal public employees subject to stabilization policies.
3. Increases in wages of non-Federal public employees subject to Board review.

Authority: Sections 1 to 3 issued under section 704, Public Law 774, Eighty-first Congress. Interpret or apply title IV, Public Law 774, Eighty-first Congress (E. O. 10161, Sept. 9, 1950, 15 F. R. 6105).

SECTION 1. Increases in wages of non-Federal public employees authorized: Increases in the wages, salaries, and other compensation of State, county, municipal, and other non-Federal governmental employees whose wages, salaries, and other compensation are fixed by statute, ordinance, or regulation of duly constituted authorities of such governmental bodies may be made without the prior authorization of the Wage Stabilization Board, subject to the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this regulation.

SEC. 2. Increases in wages of non-Federal public employees subject to stabilization policies: State, county, municipal, and other non-Federal governments and agencies thereof in making increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation of their employees are expected to conform to the national wage stabilization policy as expressed in the Defense Production Act of 1950, Executive Order 10161, General Wage Stabilization Regulation 1, issued by the Economic Stabilization Administrator on January 26, 1951, the general regulations and statements of policy issued by the Wage Stabilization Board pursuant thereto, and such orders or regulations as may from time to time be issued thereunder or in connection therewith.

SEC. 3. Increases in wages of non-Federal public employees subject to Board review. The Wage Stabilization Board reserves the right to review increases made under the terms of section 1 of this regulation and to revoke or modify such increases when required in order to effectuate the policies of the Defense Production Act and the applicable orders or regulations issued thereunder or in connection therewith.

Adopted unanimously by the Wage Stabilization Board.

Issued February 1, 1951.

CYRUS S. CHING,
Chairman.

The concurrent resolution—Resolution 32—of the New York State Legislature previously referred to reads as follows:

Concurrent resolution of the senate and assembly memorializing Congress to enact legislation which will exempt employees of the State and the political subdivisions thereof from the present wage stabilization order

Whereas the Federal Wage Stabilization Board has announced a wage freeze in conjunction with a price freeze at the highest levels between December 19, 1950, and January 25, 1951; and

Whereas the said wage freeze includes hundreds of thousands of employees of the State and its political subdivisions; and

Whereas the salaries of government employees have fallen far below the level necessary to maintain a decent standard of living; and

Whereas this order jeopardizes and forestalls the present wage adjustments which have been promised by State and municipal authorities for such employees: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the people of the State of New York through their representatives in the senate and assembly hereby respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation, if necessary, and the Wage Stabilization Board to promulgate orders which will exempt employees of the State and its political subdivisions from the said wage stabilization order; and it is further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That copies of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to Cyrus S. Ching, Chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of Congress duly elected from the State of New York and that the latter be urged to devote themselves to the task of accomplishing the purpose of this resolution.

By order of the senate,

WILLIAM S. KING,
Secretary.

In assembly, February 5, 1951, concurred in without amendment.

By order of assembly.

ANSLEY B. BORKOWSKI,
Clerk.

NEHRU IRKED BY PLEA FOR GRAIN SENT TO UNITED STATES

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, not long ago I made the remark on the floor of this House that I felt that when we were giving things away we ought to be very sure that the recipients wanted our help. This is not always the case. The words were hardly out of my mouth when I picked up the Washington Evening Star and read this headline: "Nehru irked by plea for grain sent to United States."

Now this is a rather interesting statement. Apparently the Prime Minister is very much upset and annoyed. This article states, and I quote:

The Prime Minister told the House the cable, sent to Vice President BARKLEY and House Speaker SAM RAYBURN, was sent with no reference to members of the Government. Members of Parliament, Mr. Nehru continued, may send a message to anyone they wish, but confusion and embarrassment could result for members to address officials of foreign governments without consultation with (India's) Government and without consideration of the larger issues involved and of India's foreign policy.

BRANNAN PLAN NO. 2

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, the press, on Saturday last, carried an announcement by Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan to the effect that he planned on consolidating several of the bureaus and/or functions of his Department to the end that greater efficiency and economy in operation might be accomplished.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the sort of announcement that a vast number or percentage of our people have been asking, hoping, and praying for these many years.

First, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I wish to congratulate the Secretary for bringing out this second, or Brannan plan No. 2. This is a plan that will receive the universal approval of our tax-burdened people. It is a plan that has much merit and possibilities and is long overdue.

With an estimated personnel of more than 90,000 Government employees, too many to have an exact count, we all know that there is much overlapping with a resulting great loss of manpower.

Now, if Secretary Brannan can call his Department heads together, consolidate their activities and then, with the reduced number of bureaus, issue definite orders to reduce the number of employees by at least 50 percent, I venture to say that efficiency will be increased. Such action on his part will set such an excellent example, and meet with such popular approval, that it may be promptly followed by a Chapman plan, a Sawyer plan, a White House plan, and yea, even an Oscar Ewing plan, from which this Congress may evolve a plan that will bring about a tremendous reduction in domestic expenditure, and this Eighty-second Congress can reestablish, in a substantial manner, a return of confidence in the Government and the individual Representatives.

I commend the Brannan plan No. 2, and again congratulate the Secretary.

THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the thirty-third anniversary of the independence of Lithuania I wish again to restate my feelings of sympathy that I have previously expressed on the floor of the House, not only for the courageous Lithuanians still under the thumb of Russian aggression, but for our own citizens of Lithuanian ancestry who feel so keenly the separation from their mother country. These thoughts are graphically expressed in the following excerpts from a letter which I received from Mary M. Kizis, the executive secretary of the Lithuanian American Information Center:

Lithuanian Americans, as well as Lithuanians everywhere this side of the iron curtain, will observe the day with fitting ceremonies, while Lithuanians in the homeland, completely shut off by the iron curtain, will silently and secretly join in observing an independence which has been temporarily put aside.

In the brief span between the two World Wars, Lithuania established her right to take her place in the family of free nations. The cause of freedom was precious to her and her progress was remarkable.

Today, Lithuania, as a nation, is being exterminated. She is the victim of a consistently carried out genocide. The Soviet occupation has cost over 500,000 lives, victims of torture, planned starvation, political executions, and exile to death camps. People are still being deported every month. Husbands are separated from their wives and children; wives are sent to different Siberian camps; the children to be reared in complete contradiction to their cultural and religious background.

Lithuania, together with other nations behind the iron curtain, is waging a great struggle against world-Communist expansion. Their freedom is not only for their own liberation, but it is a fight for freedom in the world.

Lithuania's underground is still fighting a heroic fight against a mighty, vastly superior, ruthless force.

Lithuanian Americans have a stake in the survival of this ancient race. Almost every Lithuanian American still has relatives in the old country, with whom all contact has been broken during the Soviet occupation.

The Lithuanian American Information Center, as spokesman for the Lithuanian American Council, which represents the overwhelming majority of nearly a million Lithuanian Americans, would like to call this anniversary to the attention of their good American friends who have helped them in the past in appealing to the conscience of the world.

Freedom-loving Americans everywhere admire the spirit through which this small country had attained its independence, and it is the hope of all of us that Lithuania may soon again take its place among the free democracies of the world.

AID TO INDIA

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD at this point a cablegram received by the Speaker of the House from certain Representatives of the Indian Parliament.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The cablegram referred to follows:

NEW DELHI, February 17, 1951.

THE SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Undersigned members of Indian Parliament belonging to various parties, groups, and states request you place this message before honorable Members of House of Representatives of the United States consideration by your House of proposal for gift to India and for grains to help this country tide over present shortage and mitigate distress to our people will be watched keenly by many here. We are amongst those in India who are opposed to totalitarianism in all its forms and recognize that liberty and integrity of free countries of Asia including our own are today menaced by Communist expansionism. We have, on the other hand, watched with appreciation the great effort for the welfare of the free world embodied in Marshall aid and the point 4 program. We would like to see United States and India cooperate with countries of commonwealth and other democracies in securing world peace through collective security convinced as we are that the bulk of the Indian people believe in the democratic way of life and recognize in the democracies of the world their natural friends and allies. We should be happy to see our fellow legislators in United States Congress give their approval to proposal now before them. Moved by the needs of the people of India and uninfluenced by momentary differences of policy we are confident such a gesture of solidarity on the part of the representatives of the American people toward the people of India would strengthen friendship and understanding between our two countries and bring them closer together.

Mrs. Kalavati Dikshit, and Messrs. Naffruddin Ahmed, Frank Anthony Lakshmanrao, Bhatkar Satish, Chandra Jagannath Das, P. Y. Deshpande, G. A. Dholokia, G. S. Guha, A. B. Gurung, H. C. Heda, T. CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DESIGNATION OF MEMBER TO READ WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the special order agreed to on February 12, 1951, the Chair designates the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] to read Washington's Farewell Address immediately after the reading of the Journal on Thursday, February 22, 1951.

THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT] read a letter from a sergeant in Korea which referred to the fact that he was fighting in a war which was undeclared. Not only that, that sergeant and his comrades are fighting in a war which is not the war of the United States, as everyone knows, but a war of the United Nations. I call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to the fact that the flag under which these men are fighting over there—these men from the National Guard units and others—is not the flag of the United States—it is not the Stars and Stripes, but it is the flag of the United Nations. If you noticed that editorial in Collier's last week, they have the flag of the United Nations above the Stars and Stripes, above the flags of all nations. For the first time in our history our flag has willingly been hauled down, replaced by another. It indicates the surrender of our independence. Sometimes the gentleman from Mississippi, who is a great student of history, a patriotic and loyal citizen who tells us about the things we should know, may someday tell us why we are fighting under that flag.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

CAN WE FIGHT TWO WARS 13,000 MILES APART AT THE SAME TIME?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, without getting into this controversy between the gentleman from Georgia, and the gentleman from Arkansas, I desire to point out the fact that our country is in the most deplorable condition it has ever been in in all its history. It is about time the Congress woke up and took over its prerogatives and stopped this so-called United Nations from sending our boys to destruction under one of their trumped-up UN flags.

Now it is proposed by some of these wild-eyed internationalists to send a million of our young men to Europe. What for? Are we going to try to go into Russia and bog down there and in Korea both? Are we going to try to fight two wars on two fronts, 13,000 miles apart?

Congress has not declared war in Korea. We had better get out of Korea and bring our boys home. That is what these letters suggest. Congress had better resume its prerogatives under the Constitution and say when and where our boys are to be sent to die, be killed or freeze to death, in foreign lands.

The Congress was elected for that purpose. You are merely getting a few messages from home now; and you are going to get more of them as time goes on. The American people are not willing for the Communist-controlled United Nations to send their boys to foreign lands to fight, freeze, and die under a foreign flag.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

EXPENDITURES FOR LAND FOR RADIO MONITORING STATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1730) to amend section 4 (g) of the Communications Act of 1934 to permit the Federal Communications Commission to make expenditures for land for radio monitoring stations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the chairman or some member of the committee can advise whether or not this is identical with the bill H. R. 4251 passed in the last session.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I am glad to inform the gentleman that this is an identical bill with the bill H. R. 4251.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. This does not have any of the controversial features that were put in the bill by another body during the last session.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. None at all. This bill has already passed the Senate this year, although there were several amendments added to it. The Commission thought it best that we get this separate provision through.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 4 (g) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) The Commission may make such expenditures including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for office supplies, lawbooks, periodicals, and books of reference, for printing and binding, for land for use as sites for radio monitoring stations and related facilities, including living quarters where necessary in remote areas, for the construction of such stations and facilities, and for the improvement, furnishing, equipping, and repairing of such stations and facilities and of laboratories and other related facilities (including construction of minor subsidiary buildings and structures not exceeding $25,000 in any one instance) used in connection with technical research activities, as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the Commission and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEDGWICK COUNTY, KANS., BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 335) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a certain claim of the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon, notwithstanding any law to the contrary, the claim of the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans., against the Government of the United States on account of delinquent real-estate taxes for the tax years 1944, 1945, 1946, and 1947 assessed and levied against three tracts of land in sections 11 and 14 of township 28 south, range 1 east of the sixth principal meridian, in Sedgwick County, Kans., constituting the aircraft factory and grounds owned in such years by the Defense Plant Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and leased to the Boeing Airplane Co. and transferred on or about February 25, 1948, by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the United States subject to unpaid taxes for said 4 years. Such court shall determine the amount of said taxes, and render judgment in favor of said Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans., and against the United States for the amount of any such taxes which such court may find and adjudge to have been lawfully assessed against such real estate and remaining due and unpaid: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing suit or judgment for interest, penalties or charges on, or in connection with said taxes. The court shall have such jurisdiction if suit is instituted within 60 days after the date of enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION OF FORMER CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 400) to provide for the expeditious naturalization of former citizens of the United States who have lost United States citizenship through voting in a political election or in a plebiscite held in Italy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of some member of the committee if this is an identical bill with the one that was passed in the Eighty-first Congress, known as H. R. 6616.

Mr. WALTER. It is the same bill, and the same bill as reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. It was on the Senate Calendar last year when the Senate adjourned.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SADLAK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this measure, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I take this opportunity not to object, but to add my complete and wholehearted endorsement of the purposes and aims provided in H. R. 400. In the second session of the Eighty-first Congress I introduced a like measure, H. R. 6781, which followed the proposal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] then incorporated in H. R. 6616. Since the measure did not have the same success in the other body that had been accorded it here in the House, the measure failed to become a law. Therefore, on the opening day of this session of the Eighty-second Congress I again reintroduced my bill, and it was given the designation of H. R. 369. That bill is the same as H. R. 400, which today has my fullest support, should pass, and have the approval of the other body at the earliest possible date.

The necessity of the relief provided by this legislation was brought to me quite forcibly by relatives in my district of the State of Connecticut who were separated and could not be reunited due to the loss of United States citizenship caused by participation in these elections. Considerable personal hardship has been the direct result of voting in the Italian elections, and this measure will greatly alleviate the difficulties which definitely were not anticipated at the time of the overt act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a person who, while a citizen of the United States, has lost citizenship of the United States solely by reason of having voted in a political election or plebiscite held in Italy on June 2, 1946, or on April 18, 1948, and who has not subsequent to such voting committed any act which, had he remained a citizen, would have operated to expatriate him, may be naturalized by taking, prior to 2 years from the enactment of this act, before any naturalization court specified in subsection (a) of section 301 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, or before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad, the oaths prescribed by section 335 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended. Certified copies of such oaths shall be sent by such diplomatic or consular officer or such court to the Department of State and to the Department of Justice. Such persons shall have, from and after naturalization under this section, the same citizenship status as that which existed immediately prior to its loss. The illegal or fraudulent procurement of naturalization under this amendment shall be subject to cancellation in the same manner as provided in section 338 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended.

SEC. 2. The act of August 7, 1946 (Public Law 614; 60 Stat. 866), is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVILEGE OF BECOMING A NATURALIZED CITIZEN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 403) providing for the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all aliens having a legal right to permanent residence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] if this bill, as in the case of the other bills brought up today on the Consent Calendar, is identical with legislation passed by this body in the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. WALTER. This is the same bill that was passed on four occasions by this House. It has never been acted upon by the Senate, largely because it had become incorporated in an omnibus bill which the Senate has not considered up to this time. However, it is the same bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FARRINGTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. FARRINGTON. I am strongly in favor of this bill, which removes the remaining racial restrictions in our naturalization laws. I introduced at the opening of this Congress a bill to remove racial restrictions from our immigration as well as our naturalization laws, and throughout my service in Congress have actively supported this policy. I regret only that this bill does not cover within its provisions the removal also of the restrictions in our immigration laws.

The restrictions involving Chinese, Indians, and Filipinos have already been removed. Each of these peoples were given at the same time nominal quotas.

The largest group of persons now in this country without the privileges of naturalization are the Japanese. Probably more of them live in Hawaii than in any other part of the country.

This fact should not obscure the application of this legislation to the Koreans and to a very large and varied group of people who reside in and about the Pacific. Among these people, for instance, are the Samoans. Close to a quarter of all of the people of the Samoan race live in east Samoa under the American flag. The balance of Samoans, those who are resident in western Samoa, live under the flag of New Zealand, but will also be given the privileges of naturalization under this law. This is as it should be.

Other members of the Polynesian race, such as the Tongans, Maoris, and Tahitians, people who live on the islands of the eastern Pacific, will also come within the provisions of this bill. They will no longer suffer the discrimination in our naturalization laws, as they do at the present time, after the enactment of this bill.

The law also covers the Micronesians. Virtually all of these people are now living under the American flag as residents of the trust territory. Although in the aggregate they are not a large group, numbering less than 60,000, they are spread over many islands in the central Pacific. The importance of these islands to this country from a strategic standpoint is so great that we have assumed the responsibility for their government and general welfare. Relatively few of these people are in this country, but our relations with them have assumed an importance they did not have before.

The law likewise will cover the people of southeastern Asia. Although the number of them in this country is almost insignificant, our relation with their countries at this time is a vitally important one.

The removal of the restrictions in our immigration laws is certain to foster friendship among them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 303 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (60 Stat. 416; 8 U. S. C., Supp. 703), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 303. The right to become a naturalized citizen of the United States, subject to the provisions of this act, shall not be denied or abridged because of race: Provided, That no alien who, under law existing immediately prior to the enactment of this section, as here amended, would have been ineligible to immigrate to the United States because of race shall become eligible for immigration to the United States by reason of the enactment of this section, as here amended."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIMANTS DAMAGED BY BLASTING OPERATIONS ON THE MERRIMACK RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 512) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims arising out of certain blasting operations on the Merrimack River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CLARIFYING THE IMMIGRATION STATUS OF ALIEN SPOUSES AND CHILDREN OF MEMBERS OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1090) to extend the period for the admission of alien spouses and minor children of citizen members of the United States Armed Forces.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, because I feel this is a very meritorious piece of legislation, I wish to ask the chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration how the committee proposes to deal with civilians in the service of the Government in the Army and Navy in Japan and elsewhere who intend to marry or have married women of races ineligible to citizenship?

Mr. WALTER. In the first place, it is believed that within the next few months there will be general legislation enacted removing race as a bar to immigration and naturalization. I believe the subcommittee feels that instead of dealing with this particular problem piecemeal it is better to proceed with private bills in the few cases that come to our attention. The entire problem will be dealt with in an omnibus bill which I introduced several days ago, H. R. 2379.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Then it is the disposition of the subcommittee to deal favorably with private bills.

Mr. WALTER. Without committing the subcommittee in advance, I feel sure I may say to the gentleman that is the situation.

Mr. FARRINGTON. I may say that I have some 20 bills of this character and while I do not want to add to the responsibility and labors of the subcommittee, I will proceed on that basis and trust that they will receive the same generous consideration that similar legislation has heretofore received.

Mr. WALTER. I am sure I can assure the gentleman of that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law 717, Eighty-first Congress, is hereby amended to read: "Notwithstanding the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (8 U. S. C. 213 (c)), alien spouses or unmarried minor children of United States citizens serving in, or having an honorable discharge certificate from the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II or the present national emergency shall, if otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, be eligible to enter the United States with nonquota immigration visas issued under the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (8 U. S. C. 204 (a)): Provided, That in the cases of such alien spouses of United States citizens serving in, or having an honorable discharge certificate from the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II or the present national emergency, the marriage shall have occurred before or during the national emergency proclaimed by the President on December 16, 1950, or until such earlier time as Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate."

With the following committee amendments:

The amendments are as follows:

On page 1, on lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "or the present national emergency."

On page 2, on lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "or the present national emergency."

Beginning on line 8, after the word "before", strike out the balance of the bill and substitute in lieu thereof: "twelve months after the enactment of this act, as hereby amended."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARIFYING THE IMMIGRATION STATUS OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2339) to clarify the immigration status of certain aliens.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object because I believe this to be a meritorious bill and one that can properly be passed by unanimous consent, may I inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, if in effect this bill does not direct the Attorney General to carry out the spirit and intent of previously enacted legislation by the Congress?

Mr. WALTER. In a word that is exactly what the bill does because at the time the conferees labored with the problem we are now confronted with, we felt quite certain that existing law was in no wise amended—that is, existing law with respect to affiliation with or membership in certain Communist, Nazi, and Fascist organizations. The body of the law had been interpreted on numerous occasions. But the Attorney General felt that we had amended the law to such an extent that the body of it and its interpretations by the court had been changed.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. The gentleman feels that the passage of this bill will clarify the whole situation so that the intent of the Congress can be carried out as originally expressed?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill affects the loved ones of many of our war veterans and I think it should be passed without delay.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it so happens I, too, have cases like the gentleman from New Jersey who are affected by this bill. I would like to ask the gentleman, however, to explain the proviso which is contained in the bill and which is disturbing a good many people because it may deprive us of the services and usefulness of those who have fled from the Communists, who have abandoned them and who we may find very useful in our efforts to fight communism.

Mr. WALTER. I am well aware of the problem the gentleman from New York presents; however, in considering the question of whether or not membership in or affiliation with various organizations should act as a bar, the subcommittee concluded that if we were to err it should be on the side of the security of the United States. There is no way of telling whether or not a man or woman was an innocent or involuntary member of a Communist organization. I may say that the easiest thing a Communist does is to lie.

With respect to the Nazi and Fascist organizations, the situation is entirely different because in the Berlin Document Center there is a complete record of every member of the Nazi organization; and the record discloses the part that an individual played in these several organizations. The same thing is true with respect to Italy regarding fascism. So that we are not legislating in the dark insofar as the Nazi or Fascist organizations are concerned. However, with respect to Communists there are no records. There is no way of telling whether or not a person who comes forward today and says, "I was an innocent member of a Communist organization" is telling the truth.

Mr. JAVITS. How is the committee going to deal with these cases of persons who fled from behind the iron curtain and where we may have a real desire to take them in?

Mr. WALTER. There are organizations behind the iron curtain, there are labor unions and other groups that were by edict made component parts of the Communist system. In the general legislation that is being considered in the Senate now, and which will be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary very shortly, there will be provided an escape clause for truly innocent people. But it is a very difficult problem, one that cannot be dealt with quickly.

We are now concerned with a situation that should be clarified as soon as possible. However, on the broad over-all question of membership in proscribed organizations there must be considerable testimony taken, after which we can then write the kind of a formula that will make it possible, after the burden of proof has shifted for us, to feel very sure that a person who says he was an innocent, involuntary member of one of the proscribed organizations is, in fact, telling the truth.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, it also might be pointed out that in a number of instances we have, in fact, enacted private bills to cover just such situations as the gentleman is referring to.

Mr. WALTER. Oh, yes. The Committee on the Judiciary, at the time this particular bill was discussed, agreed unanimously that in these exceptional situations we would enact private legislation, but we do not think it is to the best interest of the United States to let down the bars to the possible infiltration of thousands of Communists in the disguise of involuntary membership.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, was there anything that the committee had in mind in using the term "communist" with a small "c" as opposed to Communists or members of the Communist Party? For instance, was it intended by the committee to exclude all the working people of Europe, for instance, who might be members of the Socialist Party? Probably every workingman in Europe is a member of a Socialist Party of one kind or another.

Mr. WALTER. This term is related to the language of the act of October 16, 1918, as amended, and it was meant to fit the definitions of such act.

Mr. YATES. Can the gentleman specify any examples of that, for example?

Mr. WALTER. Yes. That would mean, for example, a member of a cooperative, which became part of a Communist organization. All members would come within the category and would be excluded.

Mr. YATES. By Communist organization, the gentleman means the Communist Party?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; and its affiliates, as defined in the act of October 16, 1918, as amended.

Mr. YATES. And is it intended by the committee to exclude members of Socialist parties, for instance, who were never members of the Communist Party?

Mr. WALTER. The definitions are contained in the act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I have received a number of communications from soldiers in Austria and Germany who are married to natives of those countries, who had been forced to belong to Nazi organizations when they were 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 years of age. Is it the purpose of this measure to clarify that particular category?

Mr. WALTER. Exactly.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, there are, very obviously, several questions on the important issue dealt with by this legislation. I have several constituents in my district with relatives who are DP's, who are affected by this clarification. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. WALTER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read into the RECORD at this point a telegram I received from an organization of United States soldiers in Germany.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. The telegram reads as follows:

HEIDELBERG, February 16, 1951.

Recommend amending McCarran law permitting entry of fiancées who joined totalitarian groups under 14 years thus avoiding injustice thousands veterans.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, from my personal experience, I can vouch for the accuracy of the telegram which has just been read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] may be prevailed upon to withdraw the objection which he has raised to the passage of this much-needed legislation. I appeal to the gentlemen to reconsider the matter in order that the plight of hundreds of brides of our own GI's and other loved ones of American citizens may be alleviated promptly.

The misinterpretation which the Attorney General has accorded the Internal Security Act of 1950 has brought untold anguish to the hearts of wives, husbands, parents, children, and other loved ones of deserving and worthy applicants for immigration to this country. Let us not longer delay in forcing him to rectify his mistake. It is his persistence in his peculiar interpretation of the wording of the statute which has occasioned the necessity for this legislation. This is an almost unprecedented step to direct him to amend his regulations to conform to court decisions and carry out the intent of Congress with regard to these aliens seeking admission to this country. So far as my research has been able to disclose, this is the first time Congress has been required to direct a change in the administrative regulations of the Immigration Service.

Of course, administrative misinterpretation can nullify the best of laws, if legal precedent is not followed when the regulations to effect its purposes are formulated. A good law, badly administered, can easily be made to look like a bad law. The enactment of this measure today should end, once and for all, the studied campaign to discredit the Internal Security Act.

It is only fair to point out that in several instances the meaning ascribed by the State Department to words and clauses in section 22 of the Internal Security Act is not in accord with that set forth by the Attorney General. It is perhaps understandable that the Secretary of State, however, has not seen fit to go to the mat with the Attorney General on the subject. The result has been that American consuls overseas have virtually invoked a "freeze order" on the processing of nearly all immigration cases. Despite their disagreement with the Attorney General, their reasoning has been that they did not want the unfortunate victims of his actions to be brought to this country and then virtually incarcerated on Ellis Island because he saw fit to construe the law in a different manner from the construction placed on it by the State Department.

It should be pointed out that all of the Senators and Representatives who acted as conferees on the Internal Security Act signed a letter to the Attorney General concurring in the views of the Department of State and taking issue with him on his interpretation of this statute. These are the men who should know better than anyone else what was intended by the legislative enactment.

In their letter the conferees stated that it was their opinion that the interpretations set forth in a series of letters to the Attorney General by the Department of State are in accord with the established body of judicial and administrative interpretations upon which was premised the reenactment of such language in the Internal Security Act of 1950. In conclusion, the conferees urged that the Attorney General give renewed consideration to the matter. Thus far, however, he has not seen fit to change his rulings on the subject.

According to a letter addressed to the Secretary of State the Attorney General has based his exclusion of certain aliens under section 22 on the following words, and I quote:

> Those who "at any time, shall be or shall have been members * * * of the Communist or other totalitarian party * * * or organization."

Hence, he says:

> The test is not whether the alien is considered dangerous to the national security but simply whether or not he is or has been a member of a totalitarian party or organization, regardless of whether or not he may now be harmless, antitotalitarian, pro-American, or the circumstances under which he is or was a member of such totalitarian party or organization.

In a reply to the conclusions of the Attorney General, the Department of State over the signature of Carlisle H. Humelsine, Deputy Under Secretary, demonstrates that the construction placed by the Attorney General is dependent upon the deletion of certain phrases which are vital to a correct interpretation. As a result, he has ruled that members of the German and Italian Armies are excludable because they belonged to totalitarian organizations. But as the Department of State's letter points out very lucidly all armies are totalitarian organizations by their very nature in that a private is forced to take commands, regardless of his opinion of such commands. But, despite this, the American Army, for example, could by no stretch of the imagination be called a totalitarian party. By telescoping the phrases, the Attorney General has made the word organization seem equivalent to party, within the meaning of the act, while in fact the German and Italian Armies were neither totalitarian parties nor organizations, in the sense of being a subsidiary or branch of the party.

This instance, technical as it may be, seems to me a striking example of the perversion of the intent and purpose of Congress, since under this ruling members of the British and French Armies could be excluded as belonging to totalitarian organizations. While I hold no particular brief for the admission to the United States of German and Italian Army members, nevertheless I see no valid basis under the law for the blanket exclusion of all these army men.

Similarly the Congress did not intend to exclude persons who during childhood were forced to join Nazi or Fascist youth movements in order to live or get food or an education, nor did Congress intend that workers who joined in order to earn a living wage should be excluded. They are not a threat to the security of this country, and in my opinion, they do not come under the terms of the law "aliens who are members of or affiliated with" totalitarian parties or organizations.

The courts have held that decisions made under duress may be nullified and the subject not held accountable for the strict statutory results of his actions. For example, section 401 (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940 provides that a citizen of the United States shall lose his nationality by "entering or serving in the armed forces of a foreign state unless expressly authorized by the laws of the United States, if he has or acquires the nationality of such foreign state." However, it has been held administratively and by the courts that nationality is not lost under that statute when the military service was involuntary—In re Asgal (75 F. Supp. 268 (1947); Dos Reis ex rel. Camara v. Nicolls (161 F. 2d 560 (1947)).

These legal precedents were available both to the lawmakers when the bill was written and to the Attorney General when his administrative rulings on the situation were promulgated. There was clearly no intent on the part of Congress to interfere with the long line of decisions defining what constitutes "duress" and "involuntary." When the law was passed, the Congress had every right to believe that the Attorney General would follow these established legal precepts.

A similar situation has arisen from the Attorney General's interpretation of the verb "affiliate" as used in the act. There is a sound basis in the law for an exact legal definition of "affiliate" as it is used in this section.

The act of October 16, 1918, as amended by the act of June 28, 1940, reads in part as follows:

> That any alien who, at any time shall be or shall have been a member of any one of the following classes shall be excluded from admission into the United States:
> (c) Aliens who believe in, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group, that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches—

And so forth. Section 22 of the Internal Security Act of 1950, in amending the foregoing act of 1918, incorporates this very subsection and adds, among other provisions, the following: "Aliens who are members of or affiliated with"—list of prescribed organizations follow.

This pertinent language, identical in both statutes, reads: "Members of or affiliated with." The preservation of this language—tested as it is in the courtrooms and in administrative rulings—was intentional.

The unchallenged interpretations referred to above pertain both to the definition of "membership" and of "affiliation." To cite only a few of them:

> In Colver v. Skeffington (Fed. 17, 72 (D. C. Mass. 1920)) the court in considering petitions for writs of habeas corpus of aliens held under warrants of arrest for deportation made the following statement with respect to membership in an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence proscribed by the act of October 16, 1918:
> "* * * I accord with what I understand now to be the view of the Department of Labor, that such membership must be a real membership in or an actual affiliation with the proscribed organization. * * * Congress could not have intended to authorize the wholesale deportation of aliens who, accidentally, artificially, or unconsciously in appearance only, are found to be members of or affiliated with an organization of whose platform and purpose they have no real knowledge."

In Bridges v. Wixon (326 U. S. 135 (1945)) the Supreme Court of the United States said:

> The legislative history throws little light on the meaning of "affiliation" as used in the statute. It imports, however, less than membership but more than sympathy. * * * But he who cooperates with such an organization only in its wholly lawful activities cannot by that fact be said as a matter of law to be "affiliated" with it. Nor is it conclusive that the cooperation was more than intermittent or repeated, the act or acts tending to prove "affiliation" must be of that quality which indicates an adherence to or a furtherance of the purposes or objectives of the proscribed organization as distinguished from mere cooperation with it in lawful activities. The act or acts must evidence a working alliance to bring the program to fruition. * * * But close cooperation is not sufficient to establish an "affiliation" within the meaning of the statute. It must evidence a working alliance to bring the proscribed program to fruition.

U. S. v. Reiner (79 F. (2d) 315, 317 (CCA 2d, 1935)) is also illuminating on this subject.

Then the following appears in the Immigration Manual of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice:

> "Affiliation" is a working alliance to bring to fruition the proscribed program of an organization, as distinguished from mere cooperation with the organization in its lawful activities or in the attainment of its wholly lawful objectives. The word imports less than membership but more than sympathy, and includes an element of dependability upon which the organization can rely that, though not equivalent to membership duty, rests upon a course of conduct that could not be abruptly ended without giving at least reasonable cause for the charge of a breach of good faith.

The act or acts tending to prove affiliation must be of that quality that indicates an adherence to or a furtherance of the purposes or objectives of the proscribed organization as distinguished from mere cooperation with it in wholly lawful activities.

It is evident both from judicial decisions and from departmental rulings that affiliation, while meaning less than membership, still implies ideological adherence to the purposes of the party or organization. Under this meaning a person affiliated with such a party or organization, if Communist or totalitarian, would properly be excluded as a threat to our national security under the internal-security law. However, under this definition, too, persons who, either as children or adults, joined youth or educational, professional, or labor groups sponsored by a totalitarian party, under threat of imprisonment or starvation, should not be considered as affiliated nor excluded under the law.

But the Attorney General has remained adamant in his peculiar interpretation of the wording of the statute. That is why we are asked today to pass the bill now before us.

REQUEST FOR ACTION BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ON THE RFC SCANDAL

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wrote a letter to the Attorney General on February 14, 1951, calling to his attention specific Federal statutes, violations of which seem to be revealed in the report of the Senate Banking and Currency subcommittee on the investigation of the RFC.

I want to call the attention of the Congress to the fact that I wrote this letter to the Attorney General and set out those details. I would like to emphasize the basic point of the letter which is that a congressional committee's purpose of investigating is not to bring about the conviction of men for violations of the Federal statutes as they exist, but is really for the purpose of obtaining facts of violations so that the law may be changed, if it is deemed advisable, to prevent future violations. On the other hand, it is the duty of the executive branch of the Government and particularly the Attorney General's office to correct violations that have occurred and to make far-reaching investigations into situations where violations seem to have occurred so that punishment may be carried out in accordance with law. It is unfortunate that the Attorney General's office has been so remiss in this duty that the congressional committees, as an incident to their investigations, are bringing out multitudinous violations which the Attorney General's office should have been bringing out. Furthermore, the Attorney General's office is not acting upon the information dug up by these congressional committees which it should have been digging up itself.

Therefore, I am putting into the RECORD a copy of the letter that I wrote to the Attorney General:

FEBRUARY 14, 1951.

Hon. J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Attorney General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It has now been almost 2 weeks since the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency issued its report of its study of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, titled "Favoritism and Influence." To date there has been no indication that your office is taking any action to follow up on the numerous possible law violations which have been brought out in that report. It is apparent from a careful reading of the report that the following sections of the Federal statutes may have been violated:

Title 18, section 657: Any RFC employee who "embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, credits, securities, or other things of value" belonging to the RFC is subject to a maximum fine of $5,000 or maximum imprisonment of 5 years, or both."

Title 15, section 604b provides, in effect, all loans "shall be of such sound value or so secured as reasonably to assure retirement or repayment."

Title 15, section 604d provides: "No fee or commission shall be paid by any applicant for financial assistance under the provisions of this act in connection with any such application, and any agreement to pay or payment of any such fee or commission shall be unlawful."

Title 15, section 604e: "No director, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the Corporation in any manner, directly or indirectly, shall participate in the deliberation upon or the determination of any question affecting his personal interest, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested."

Title 18, section 1914: "Whoever, being a Government official or employee, receives any salary in connection with his services as such an official or employee from any source other than the Government of the United States * * * or whoever * * * makes any contribution to or in any way supplements the salary of any Government official or employee for the services performed by him for the Government of the United States" is subject to a maximum fine of $1,000 or maximum imprisonment of 6 months or both.

Title 18, section 1905: Any Federal employee who divulges "in any manner or to any extent not authorized by law any information coming to him in the course of his employment * * * which information concerns or relates to a trade secret * * * amount or source of any income, profits, losses, or expenditures of any person, firm, partnership, corporation, or association" is subject to a maximum fine of $1,000 or maximum imprisonment for 1 year or both, and "shall be removed from office."

A cursory examination of the Senate subcommittee report reveals at least 21 serious possible violations of these statutes and, in addition, there are several instances of apparent perjury provided, of course, the witnesses were testifying under oath at the time they gave their testimony. I cite for your consideration a few examples.

Quoting from page 5 of the Senate report:

"The subcommittee has been told repeatedly that certain Washington attorneys and certain other people were unduly influential with officials of the RFC. In some instances the reports have been received in sworn testimony which asserts that for a sufficient fee these people would give assurance, where no one else could, that matters pending before the RFC would have a successful outcome."

Quoting from page 10 of the Senate report:

"Strandlund [Carl Strandlund of Lustron Corp.] made allegations of other improprieties. His testimony describes instances in which Dunham or his friends attempted to influence the business decisions of Lustron Corp. for their own purposes. One such instance had to do with the resale of steel which was in short supply. Another instance had to do with the proposed substitution of a Jacobs product for other equipment used in the Lustron house. In the latter case there was to be $15 per unit for Meri Young."

Quoting from page 12 of the Senate report:

"The entries in [Walter L.] Dunham's office records indicate that it was his practice to discuss the affairs of RFC freely with representatives of the Democratic National Committee, and to give special attention to matters in which the committee was interested. Though he was a Republican board member [appointed through the influence of a former Democratic national committeeman], Dunham's most frequent visitors, judging from his office records, were attorneys and others who had been introduced by Chairman William M. Boyle or his assistants. Dunham cooperated freely with these people."

I would appreciate it if you would let me know what plans you are making to bring these matters before the grand jury and what plans your office is making, if any, toward a full investigation of these seemingly multitudinous criminal acts. Surely, the far-reaching effect of this scandal demands prompt action upon your part. A Federal grand jury should be specially convened for the purpose of getting to the bottom of this entire matter.

It is shocking to me that you, who are the head of the law-enforcing department of the Federal Government, have made no statement or made any indication of taking action on this matter to date.

Surely you are aware of the effect on public morale when your office, and the other concerned executive offices failed to react promptly to the exposés of communism in high places in our Government. Now we have bribery and corruption.

Although congressional investigations are primarily for the purpose of determining facts so that proper laws may be written and in this particular case to protect our people and our Government from attack from without and within, nonetheless it is the duty of the executive branch and in particular the Department of Justice to act immediately when the probable commission of crimes is brought to light. And this is true whether the facts came to light through congressional investigation or otherwise.

The people of this country want no more whitewashes and no more epithets of "asinine" or "red herring" when their country is being sabotaged from within by thieves and traitors. They expect and have a right to immediate and far-reaching investigation by your Department, however high in power those may be whom the investigation may reach.

In these times of peril to our Nation, your duty is doubly manifest. It should not take a Congressman or even a voting citizen for whom he speaks, to call your attention to this duty. It is that clear.

Yours very truly,

THOS. B. CURTIS,
Member of Congress, Missouri, Twelfth District.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 1 OF 1951; RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 60)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1951, prepared in accordance with the Reorganization Act of 1949.

The reorganization plan provides strengthened administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by placing in a single Administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the functions of the present Board of Directors, except those that are specifically set forth and assigned to a new Loan Policy Board and to a board of review. The Administrator is thus made the executive head of the Corporation with major responsibility and authority over the administration of the Government programs carried out by the Corporation.

At the same time that this plan provides strengthened administration for the Corporation, it also provides certain additional safeguards with respect to loan policy and to specific loan applications. Under the reorganization plan, the Loan Policy Board promulgates general policies which shall govern the granting and denial of applications for financial assistance by the Corporation. The reorganization plan likewise includes new provisions for ensuring that all loan applications are handled in accordance with established policy.

In addition to providing strengthened administration of the Corporation and additional safeguards with respect to loan policy and the approval of specific loan applications, the reorganization plan provides the basis, by virtue of the composition of the Loan Policy Board, for better coordination of the Corporation's loan policies with other policies, programs, and activities of the Government. The reorganization plan provides that this Board shall have five members, all ex officio. These are the Administrator of the Corporation, the Deputy Administrator, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and one additional member to be designated from time to time by the President from among officials of the Government who are required to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The participation of these officials will facilitate the development of loan policies consistent with the requirements of other broad programs of the Government.

Especially important is the participation of the Secretary of Commerce who, as head of the Department of Commerce, administers most of the Government programs for nonfinancial aids to business. Giving him a voice on the Loan Policy Board will aid in bringing under common policies the financial aids to business administered by the Corporation and the nonfinancial aids carried on in the Department of Commerce. Government aid to small and independent business should be particularly benefited by the participation of the Secretary of Commerce.

Specifically, the provision in the reorganization plan for a financial assistance procedure governing the processing of applications in excess of $100,000 to any borrower strengthens and gives statutory prescription to an administrative arrangement already existing in the Corporation. In handling such loans under the reorganization plan, applications will be referred for analysis and recommendation to a board of review composed of not less than five employees of the Corporation. Whenever the Administrator approves or denies an application for financial assistance on which a board of review has recommended otherwise, he must set forth, in a memorandum to be placed in the files of the Corporation, the reasons for his action. This procedure is provided in order to assure that all applications for loans involving large sums are fully analyzed by the technical staff of the Corporation and that the recommendations of the staff are fully available to the Administrator when acting finally upon such applications.

The reorganization plan continues the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a separate corporate entity in the executive branch of the Government. Those functions which are currently performed by the Corporation or any of its agencies or officers pursuant to a delegation or assignment of functions made by the President will be subject to termination or modification of any such delegation by the President.

After investigation I have found and hereby declare that each reorganization included in Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1951 is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes set forth in section 2 (a) of the Reorganization Act of 1949. I also have found and hereby declare that by reason of these reorganizations, it is necessary to include in the reorganization plan provisions for the appointment and compensation of the Administrator and Deputy Administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The rates of compensation fixed for these officers are, respectively, those which I have found to prevail in respect of comparable officers of the executive branch of the Government.

The taking effect of the reorganization included in Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1951 may not in itself result in substantial immediate savings. However, the important objective of achieving the maximum effectiveness in the administration of the Government's lending programs to aid business will be advanced. Increased effectiveness will in turn produce indirect savings. An itemization of these savings is not practicable.

The reorganization plan is especially important at this time of national emergency. It will strengthen the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and at the same time provide additional safeguards with respect to loan policy and the approval of individual loans. It will make possible the more effective coordination of the Government's general loan policies. I strongly urge the approval of the reorganization plan as a means of achieving these objectives.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 19, 1951.

APPEAL FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to appeal to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] to withdraw the objection he has entered against the immigration bill recently brought before the House. I urge him to understand what delay will mean and I speak for a veteran hero who cannot be here today.

This veteran is Carl Giordano and he lives in my home city of Paterson, N. J. Carl fought in the European theater during World War II. When he was in Italy he met and fell in love with an Italian girl. They became betrothed. Later, however, something happened which made Carl certain there would never be a marriage. He was terribly wounded in action and had to lose both feet through amputation.

This young GI went home thinking, perhaps, his fiancée no longer cared. How delighted and thrilled he was soon to hear from her that she cared more than ever and insisted the marriage must take place.

The law permitting alien fiancées of GI's to come to the United States for marriage had expired and the State Department told Carl he would have to go to Italy and marry. Then his wife under our immigration laws would be entitled to a nonquota visa and she could return to Paterson, N. J., with him without any trouble. But trouble arose. The Internal Security Act of 1950 had been passed and when Carl was called in by the American consul he was told it had been discovered his wife had as a girl been automatically inscribed on the rolls of a youth organization under the Fascist rule. It was absolutely obligatory. Under the Government's interpretation of the act, the consul said, Carl would not return to the United States with his wife. Only by the passage of this bill can Mr. and Mrs. Carl Giordano take up their abode in our country.

Prayerfully, I appeal to my friend and colleague from Minnesota for reconsideration of his action blocking passage of this bill. I know he must feel with me that this veteran who gave so much for our country, and his bride, who did not forsake him, are entitled to the happiness they seek. It is so with many others who cannot come into our country because of the strained construction which has been placed on the act.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have always had the highest respect for the most distinguished and sincere gentleman from New Jersey, and am completely in sympathy with the case which he has just told us about. I am absolutely in agreement with the intent of the measure which is before us today, but it has not been explained to my satisfaction, and I still do not know why some people, who were compelled through no fault of their own to join totalitarian organizations are covered and others are not covered. Why this discrimination? This is a problem I am quite familiar with. In my district there are many constituents whose relatives in Europe cannot come to America because they were compelled to join, by circumstances beyond their control, organizations controlled or directed by Communists. Others joined organizations collaborating with the Germans.

For example, in Poland, Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia they had the O. F., or the Liberation Front, composed of a united resistance front made up of various political and worker and economic organizations in those countries. It had in it members of the Catholic Party, the Social-Democrat Party, and the Peasants' Party, and many others. This liberation front was often organized and directed by Communists. The aim of this Liberation Front at that time was to fight the invading enemy, who were the Germans. They did fight the enemy. Now DP's and others who so fought our common enemy are listed as having belonged to a Communist totalitarian organization and therefore are denied the right to come to this country. Many of these are now in camps in Austria and Italy. I am merely asking that the same consideration be given in such cases as is extended to cases such as the one the gentleman has made reference to. I would like to have that consideration extended to other needy and deserving cases.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, in the case that the gentleman has just cited, was the organization a Communist organization at the time that this young man was a member of it?

Mr. BLATNIK. I do not know whether it was Communist. It was Communist-organized, and Communist-led, although some of the leaders were not Communists. May I ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, who has spent a great deal of time on this problem of displaced persons, and has been most sympathetic and most helpful, to give us the assurance that his committee will seriously consider in the very near future the question of extending the same privileges to these other unfortunate people in the DP camps. In many cases they are there with their families. There are even American soldiers who have married girls who worked and fought in the liberation front, who are now displaced persons. I would like to have those wives of American veterans extended the same consideration as the wives of American soldiers who, through no fault of their own, were forced to join a Nazi organization. Can the gentleman give me that assurance?

Mr. WALTER. I will say that a bill, H. R. 4379, has already been introduced which provides an escape clause in some cases. However, even our forthcoming omnibus bill will not make it possible for active members of the Communist movement to come to the United States. There are active workers in the Communist Party who married American soldiers, whether deliberately or otherwise, who, in my opinion, should never be permitted to come into the United States.

With regard to displaced persons, I wish to assure the gentleman that I remain in close touch with our American voluntary agencies and I know very well how greatly preoccupied they are with the restrictive interpretation of the terms "members" and "membership" as expressed by regulations issued under the act of October 16, 1918, as amended. We are trying today to restate congressional intent as we know it to be and it appears logical that regulations governing the operation of our regular immigration laws and of the temporary Displaced Persons Act with its section 13, should provide for the same interpretation of identical terms used in both statutes.

Mr. BLATNIK. But as to those who are victims or who are compelled by circumstances to join such organizations when they were not themselves Communists, does not the gentleman feel they should be given the same consideration that is proposed to be given those who joined Nazi organizations?

Mr. WALTER. I do, and the legislation that has been introduced will adequately deal with those cases.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman has conveyed to the House a type of case that is worthy of deep consideration. We can see where persons, particularly during the war, who were bitterly anti-Communist but were bitterly anti-Hitler, might cooperate with Communists in their opposition to Hitler, as he was the first one to be defeated.

I can see where innocent persons who are bitterly anti-Communist might engage in a concerted activity with Communists, both of whom were fighting the same common enemy then, namely, Hitler. I think that is something that should be very carefully explored. However, this bill will do a great deal of good, and if my friend persists in his objection it will prevent even those cases that will be covered by the bill from being favorably acted upon as quickly as possible. Recognizing the logic and the weight of my friend's observation, might I ask that he withdraw his objection to this bill and let it be passed, and then the subcommittee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] is chairman, will assure the gentleman—I think he has done so already—but he will assure the gentleman that his subcommittee will give early consideration to such legislation covering the type of cases to which the gentleman has referred, and will give the gentleman from Minnesota, and anyone else, an opportunity to appear.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD] has made a very emotional plea in behalf of his constituent soldier. I suppose all of us have cases similar to that. Why could not that case have been covered, as 10 or 15 or perhaps 20 cases have sometimes been covered, by private bills, introduced as they have been by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CANFIELD. Because there are so many cases in which time is of the essence.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, you are talking today about one case. Why could you not have covered that case with a private bill?

Mr. CANFIELD. Well, I could, but this soldier from my district is over in Italy now with his bride. He went over there understanding there were no obstacles——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not yield further, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, the gentleman from Michigan has the floor not in any parliamentary sense, because the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] did not have to ask unanimous consent to withdraw his objection. Since he has made the statement, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill, and then you may proceed in order.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2339) to clarify the immigration status of certain aliens.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what I was talking about was this question as to why this particular case could not have been covered in a private bill. The gentleman from New Jersey said it could have but that the soldier or his wife, whichever it is, is in Italy now. I have a soldier whose wife has been over in Japan, and I have had a private bill in for a long time but I never could get anywhere with it. Later on I intend to object to these private bills unless some consideration can be given to other bills where the circumstances are practically the same.

What I am talking about now is whether or not this bill will weaken the McCarran Act?

Mr. WALTER. It is not going to weaken the McCarran Act; we never intended to do that. The thing the committee has attempted to do was to state what we thought we were stating when the McCarran Act was written; and I might say to the gentleman from Michigan that the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has introduced a similar bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I understand that the gentleman is trying to give to the McCarran Act the interpretation the gentleman thought the House had in mind when it was passed?

Mr. WALTER. That we knew that they had in mind when they passed it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is hereby authorized and directed to provide by regulations that the terms "members of" and "affiliated with" where used in the act of October 16, 1918, as amended (except where, in context, such terms relate to communism), shall include only membership or affiliation which is or was voluntary, and shall not include membership or affiliation which is or was solely (a) when under 14 years of age, (b) by operation of law, or (c) for purposes of obtaining employment, food rations, or other essentials of living, and where necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized in his discretion to record the entry of any alien to have been for permanent residence in any case where the alien heretofore, when applying for admission for permanent residence, was temporarily admitted pursuant to the ninth proviso of section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended, and whose inadmissibility for permanent residence was determined to be solely by reason of membership or affiliation (other than membership or affiliation related to communism) under subsection 2 of section 1 of the act of October 16, 1918, as amended.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "fourteen" and insert "sixteen."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. ABBITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in two instances, and in one include a speech of the Honorable John S. Battle, Governor of Virginia, and in the other a speech I made at Appomattox, Va., entitled "The Future Farmer of America," even though the latter may exceed the limit of two pages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON (at the request of Mr. KEATING) was given permission to extend his remarks and include additional material.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

REMOVE TAX INEQUITIES BEFORE IMPOSING STILL HEAVIER TAXES

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, my text today is a direct quotation from the remarks of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, on the day—February 6—when the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was a witness before us. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina said:

If there are any inequities in our tax laws, we should remove those inequities before we impose still heavier taxes and heavier burdens on those who are honestly paying their taxes.

One month ago I told the House how $9,000,000,000 of additional revenue could be raised without placing hardships too great upon anyone and without creating too much disturbance in our economy. I suggested that $1,000,000,000 of that $9,000,000,000 could and should come from the imposition of the corporate tax on the business earnings of certain tax-exempts, as proposed by my bill, House bill 240.

Today I wish to elaborate upon this proposal to tax the cooperatives, the building and loan associations, the mutual savings banks and other tax-avoiders.

President Truman, in his recent special tax message to the Congress, urged that we "review the tax status of organizations now exempt under present law."

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, in his prepared statement to the Ways and Means Committee 2 days later, spelled out the administration's conviction that the tax laws should be revised as to the treatment of "business organizations now exempt from tax, including cooperatives and other mutual enterprises." Recognizing the untenable competitive situation resulting from the present tax laws, he stated:

> Funds which are not returned to the members of these mutual enterprises are available tax-free for expansion in competition with other taxable businesses. We should seek to apply the corporation income tax to such retained funds.

I am glad to see President Truman and Secretary Snyder in agreement with the gentleman from North Carolina that there are inequities in the tax laws that must be removed as the first step in writing the Revenue Act of 1951. I find myself in complete disagreement with the Secretary, however, as to the amount of revenue that can be produced by the taxation of these tax exempts. According to my figures he is almost $1,000,000,000 too low in his estimate of the tax liability of all tax exempts. He tells us that taxation of the building and loan associations and the mutual savings banks would produce about $150,000,000,000, and that taxation of the cooperatives would bring in only $25,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, proof of the inadequacy of Mr. Snyder's estimate of the revenue possible from taxation of co-op corporations is easy to establish. One of the Secretary's assistants stated to our committee that there are 6,000 farmer cooperatives that are totally exempt from income tax under the terms of section 101 (12) and that there are about 4,000 farmer cooperatives that are so-called nonexempt, meaning that they pay tax only on so-called unallocated retained earnings and on earnings distributed as dividends on capital stock.

Among these 10,000 cooperatives, some have decided, as a matter of improving their public relations, to pay a part of the income tax they should pay. One of these is the Cooperative Grange-League-Federation Exchange of New York, probably the biggest co-op in the United States. Last year GLF announced that it would pay an income tax of some $928,000. That amount figures about 28 percent of its earnings at a time when competing companies were paying 38 percent of their earnings in income tax.

Another self-righteous taxpayer a couple of years ago was the Consumers Cooperative Association of Kansas City, which stated that it would pay about $400,000 tax to the Treasury. Any other corporation making the same amount of profit would have to pay a $2,000,000 tax—and CCA itself could well have afforded to pay the full amount.

Still another taxpaying cooperative was the Illinois Farm Supply Co., which also advertised the fact that it would pay about $400,000 in taxes, though its actual tax liability, were it on the same basis as its competitors, would have been at least twice that amount.

And then we have the Union Equity Cooperative Grain Exchange, of Enid, Okla., which stated last August that it proposed to pay to the Treasury a tax of nearly a million dollars on the profits it had made in transactions with the Commodity Credit Corporation. I have asked the Commissioner of Internal Revenue whether this so-called tax has been paid, and how a totally exempt co-op corporation can legally pay a tax of this kind. but, so far, I have no information from him that I can report to you.

Mr. Speaker, the point is that, inasmuch as 4 cooperatives out of 10,000 have, according to their own statements, paid to the Treasury some $3,000,000 in tax payments—actually only a fraction of what they would have paid at the full 38-percent rate—it is more than a little ridiculous to suppose that the other 9,996 farmer cooperatives, plus at least another 10,000 city consumer, hospital, and miscellaneous cooperatives, would only have to pay so puny a figure as $22,000,000, as the Secretary suggested.

Why, that is at the rate of about $700 apiece—and $700, today, is the income tax paid by an average family man with only $5,000-a-year income, or by a little corporation with only $2,800 of earnings. It is one-third of the income tax paid by a Member of Congress on his salary. Few, if any, cooperatives are so small as that.

Perhaps the answer to this discrepancy in estimates is that even in the face of a national emergency, when every one is to be taxed until it hurts, the Secretary is still seeking to give preferential treatment to this group of tax-exempt businesses.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that cooperatives, today, should also pay until its hurts, since it will hurt them no more than it hurts competing corporations. That is not my conclusion alone. It is the very recently published conclusion of one of the most distinguished and most respected tax experts in the country.

The Michigan Law Review of December 1950 published a thoughtful and fully documented article by Roswell Magill, former Under Secretary of the Treasury and now president of the Tax Foundation. Mr. Magill is a frequent expert witness before the Ways and Means Committee. His article, entitled "The Taxable Income of Cooperatives," is the result of an independent investigation of this controversial subject. The article is important because it categorically denies the oft-repeated claim of the cooperatives that they have no income and that their patronage dividends are not, therefore, taxable before distribution to members. Mr. Magill says:

> The so-called net margins of cooperative corporations constitute in reality the net income of such corporations. * * * The net margin is quite as much the net profit of the cooperative as the exactly similar net margin of operating income of the stock corporation buying or selling goods next door. * * * It should pay a Federal income tax on its gain, just as its competitor must do.

Mr. Magill concludes his article by saying:

> Tax gratuities, or subsidies, in favor of worth-while social experiments, such as cooperatives, may have been sound and desirable under the low tax rates prevailing during the first two decades of the income tax. They cannot be justified, however, in the political, economic and tax climate of the 1950's.

Mr. Speaker, we should remove the inequities in our tax laws before we impose still heavier taxes and heavier burdens on those who are honestly paying their taxes—just as the gentleman from North Carolina has said. And we must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that there is about $1,000,000,000 of practically brand-new revenue involved in removing these inequities—$1,000,000,000 which, if collected, would serve to give some relief to those who are now honestly paying their taxes.

Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons offered from time to time for the failure of the Congress to act in this important matter is, as one of my colleagues has put it, that "we must not tinker with the farmer's income." I should like to discuss that point with you.

Competent evidence, presented to the Senate Finance Committee last summer by Attorney Karl T. Loos, general counsel for the National Association of Farmer Cooperatives, proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that full taxation of the entire earnings of these co-ops would have so minute an effect on the income of the great majority of farmer-members as to be unnoticeable.

Here, for instance, is a table showing patronage-refund payments made by the big Southern States Cooperative for the year ending June 30, 1949:

Senate hearings on H. R. 8920, July 1950 (p. 740)

Range	Fiscal year ended June 30, 1949
	Patronage refunds to patrons			Dividends on outstanding capital stock
	Number of payments	Total amount paid	Average payment	Number of payments	Total amount paid	Average payment
$0.01 to $0.99	126, 821	$54, 943. 41	$0. 43	176, 482	$47, 365. 64	$0. 27
$1 to $9.99	101, 974	567, 417. 38	5. 56	46, 238	98, 080. 60	2. 12
$10 to $49.99	10, 563	340, 068. 48	32. 19	5, 041	72, 303. 38	14. 34
$50 to $99.99	746	54, 751. 36	73. 39	303	16, 588. 86	54. 75
$100 and over	163	41, 785. 41	256. 35	513	143, 813. 88	280. 33
Total	240, 267	1, 058, 966. 04	4. 41	228, 577	378, 102. 36	1. 65

This table shows that of the 240,267 patronage dividends that were paid out in that year by Southern States Cooperative, 228,795 were for less than $10 and only 163 were for as much as $100. The average payment was $4.41. If taxes at the then current rate of 38 percent had been paid on the entire amount handed out in patronage refunds—as Mr. Magill says it should be—the average payment to each of the Southern States Co-op's patrons would have been reduced by only $1.68—though the Treasury of the United States would have received $402,420 on this patronage refund account alone. Mr. Speaker, would you call that tinkering with the farmer's income?

Let us take another case, from the testimony presented by this same exceedingly able cooperative attorney. This is a table showing the combined reports of 18 local cooperatives which are affiliated with the big Missouri Farmers' Association, of Columbia, Mo.:

Senate hearings on H. R. 8920, July 1950 (p. 742)

Cooperative No.	Number of refunds	1 cent to 99 cents	$1 to $9.99	$10 to $49.99	$50 to $99.99	Over $100	Total of refunds
1	831	449	345	36	1		$1,951.29
2	693	299	323	71			2,619.67
3	2,370	1,282	842	230	14	2	9,541.97
4	1,269	737	471	58	2	1	2,715.15
5	722	269	296	171	34	12	9,028.43
6	343	187	136	19			864.97
7	1,069	694	369	6			1,363.12
8	883	512	298	73			2,554.49
9	723	206	371	142	3	1	4,527.43
10	1,087	578	442	66	1		2,882.76
11	1,113	464	426	200	17	6	8,584.95
12	750	285	345	115	5		3,561.42
13	1,925	591	922	373	35	4	15,356.71
14	1,945	447	993	398	78	29	22,629.43
15	643	216	246	154	20	7	6,845.04
16	4,380	2,205	1,515	573	58	29	29,319.94
17	3,062	2,413	587	62			3,390.88
18	1,712	808	706	182	14		7,616.14
Total	25,519	12,642	9,575	2,929	282	91	135,353.79
Percent	100.00	49.54	37.52	11.48	1.11	0.35

This table shows that out of a total of 25,519 patronage refunds that are tabulated, 12,642—or 49.54 percent—were for less than $1; 9,575—or 37.52 percent—were for from $1 to $10; and only 91 were for more than $100. The average refund was $5.30. The average refund would have been $3.36 if a tax at 38 percent had been levied before the payments were distributed, and the Federal Treasury would have received $50,434 in additional funds. I ask again, Mr. Speaker, can that be called "tinkering with the farmer's income?"

The summary finally presented by this cooperative representative is highly significant. It is to be found on page 752 of the printed hearings before the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, Eighty-first Congress, second session, on H. R. 8920.

According to that summary, prepared and presented by Mr. Loos himself, out of a total of 929,000 individual payments of patronage dividends 563,000—60 percent of the total—were for less than $1, and 285,000—31.4 percent ranged from $1 to $10. In round numbers, therefore, 849,000 of the payments tabulated—91.4 percent—were for less than $10.

The significant fact in the summary, however, is that the total amount of money represented by these 849,000 payments was less than one-quarter of the earnings of the farmer cooperatives—23.8 percent—while three-quarters of the earnings—more than 76 percent—was distributed to the recipients of 8.6 percent of the payments.

In view of these figures, Mr. Speaker, compiled by the spokesman for the cooperatives themselves, that a few big patrons get the lion's share of co-op earnings, and that if the regular corporation tax of 38 percent had been applied to the earnings of these farmer co-ops, we should have been tinkering very slightly with the personal incomes of the great bulk of farmers concerned.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my contention since the very beginning of this consideration of taxing the tax-exempts that no one would be seriously hurt by taxing these organizations and corporations under exactly the same formula that we apply to other companies. I am glad to have that opinion fully confirmed by the cooperatives themselves.

We are engaged in the task of finding $8,000,000,000, or $10,000,000,000, or $16,500,000,000, or $20,000,000,000 to build up the defenses of this Nation against aggressors. We must seek new sources of revenue, rather than continue to pile the entire burden upon those who are already overloaded—for we are already taking 25 percent of the national income in taxes, and 25 percent has always been considered the limit beyond which no nation could go and remain solvent.

The administration, unwilling to cut expenditures—though I believe they could be cut by seven or eight billion dollars—has urged that loopholes be closed, but its own suggestions for the closing of loopholes are totally inadequate.

Mr. Speaker, my own estimate of the revenue available from a really thorough job of closing loopholes is $1,000,000,000. Mr. Marriner Eccles, long-time member of the Federal Reserve Board, goes far beyond that. In testimony before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report a couple of weeks ago, he estimated that $3,000,000,000 of brand new revenue would come from loophole closing. In any event, it would be a very substantial sum.

We have a job to do. It is not a pleasant job—but it is far easier than fighting in the ice and snow and mud of Korea as thousands of our American boys are now doing. It is far easier than the task will be of tens of thousands of American boys if they are sent into the maelstrom of Western Europe.

In my opinion it is unpatriotic for any individual or for any business to refuse to pay a fair and equitable share of the tax load at this time. It is unpatriotic even to suggest that special privilege or special exemption should be continued in this day of emergency.

If we adopt the inadequate method of taxing cooperatives and other tax-exempts that is proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury, we shall have gained practically nothing. Competition will still be unfair; the cooperatives and probably the other tax-exempts as well will still be able to dodge payment of most of the tax; and the Treasury will lose a substantial sum of money—whether one billion or three billion—that easily could and most certainly should become available at once.

The gentleman from North Carolina has very rightly said:

> If there are any inequities in our tax laws, we should remove those inequities before we impose still heavier taxes and heavier burdens on those who are honestly paying their taxes.

Mr. Speaker, to that I say "Amen"—and I offer as the way to accomplish the task the inclusion of the provisions of my bill, H. R. 240, in the revenue bill of 1951. That will remove the inequities—and give us more than a billion dollars of new revenue.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. HARVEY. I have listened to the gentleman's discourse on the subject of taxes with a great deal of interest and have followed his discussions in previous instances. I happen to hold a policy with a so-called mutual company—the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., which, as the gentleman knows, is an old and very well-established company. I would simply like to ask the gentleman whether a mutual company of this type falls in the same category, so far as their taxes are concerned, as a farmer cooperative, such as the gentleman has just discussed?

Mr. MASON. It does. It falls in the same category so far as their reserves are concerned.

Mr. HARVEY. Do the mutual companies like the Northwestern enjoy the privilege of tax exemption which the so-called stock-company life insurance company enjoys? Do they enjoy an advantage?

Mr. MASON. They do enjoy an advantage and it is that advantage which places them in what might be considered unfair competition with the stock companies.

Mr. HARVEY. Let us consider a so-called building and loan association, which are very common in my district. Do these so-called building and loan associations enjoy a tax advantage over a competing bank which is a corporation?

Mr. MASON. They do, and last year in the 1950 tax bill the committee included building and loan associations and mutual savings banks to be taxed. But when they refused to tax cooperatives on the same basis I offered a motion to rescind the action of the committee because I said they were not being consistent and if they were to tax one, they should tax all on the same basis.

Mr. HARVEY. Then it is the gentleman's contention that all of them fall in the same general category so far as taxes are concerned?

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. This question of taxing cooperatives is rather elusive and difficult to understand. I do not believe the public generally understands it. Do you recommend or do you draw a distinction between the so-called farmer cooperatives which are merely marketing associations and the cooperatives, for instance, which establish retail businesses on main street?

Mr. MASON. I do. I draw a distinction and it is because the original farmer cooperative, the pure and simple farmer cooperative which was organized in order to get a better price for their product has been so elaborated upon and so extended by rulings of the Treasury—not by law—that it has brought in all of these other unfair competitive cooperatives under that same program.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. You will remember that in California the great citrus industry there was originally run by farmer cooperatives in the true sense of the word. In my own district I have the great cheese cooperatives where the farmer takes his milk to the small cheese factory and the cheese maker makes it into the form of cheese, and then it is sold and the amount of milk that the farmer sold is eventually deposited to his credit in a local bank. I consider that is a true cooperative.

Mr. MASON. And I consider it a legitimate and worth-while organization to help the farmers get the proper prices for their products. I for one would not want to do anything which would destroy that kind of co-op.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Your quarrel, then, is with the many variations that have grown up since the original concept of co-ops?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman very much, and I compliment the gentleman on his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WINSTEAD] is recognized.

THE MANPOWER SITUATION

Mr. WINSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Committee on Armed Services. For weeks we have heard witnesses testify on the question of drafting 18-year-olds. The military advocates it. They say it is necessary in order to fully mobilize manpower, yet we continue the 40-hour week for Government employees. Even though Saturday is practically the only full day a Member of Congress has free to devote to the problems of his constituents, he cannot find a bureau or an agency open for business on that day. Certainly this shows little effort to mobilize the home front and is little comfort to those who face the responsibility of preparing an adequate defense for this country. The 40-hour week prevails in industry. Unless the Government sets the example by extending the workweek for Federal employees, how can they have any basis for calling on industry for a longer workweek, and if neither Government nor industry extends its workweek, how can the military be heard to say we are fully mobilizing manpower?

Mr. Speaker, there is a grave waste of manpower within the Military Establishment itself. Square pegs in round holes, and round pegs in square holes. It happened in the last war and the military should have learned its lesson. The same thing happens today. Each day we hear of men who are placed in the Army without regard to any special training they may have. Only today my attention was called to a graduate in aeronautical engineering whom the Army has placed in a position where no special training is needed and which any soldier could fill. I know of cases where noncommissioned men with special training in war schools during the last war, with years of experience in such specialty, have been placed directly away from what they can do well, and at the same time the military wastes manpower teaching others to do what the specially trained is already equipped to do. Of course, the Military Establishment advises that individual cases should be taken up with them. The average man does not write his Congressman about such situations, and if he does, quite frequently the military can find a thousand reasons why they cannot or do not do anything about it.

I am today calling on the Military Establishment to urge the men with special experiences or qualifications to write a central office advising the military of such special training and qualifications, and that the military make every effort to place all such military personnel where such men can best be utilized. Such action must be taken. It will save both money and manpower. Of course, the military will say that they already have such information. They do have, but it is scattered in thousands of filing cabinets and unless something is done, it is forever lost.

Before all youths are called on for military service, we must not only fully utilize manpower on the civilian or home front, but within the military as well.

After the policies of the military in the use of its manpower in World War I were analyzed, it was decided by the military that there was a great waste of manpower, due to the fact that personnel was not placed in jobs in the military where their civilian experience and training could best be utilized. At the outset of World War II the military noted these mistakes in the failure to utilize the manpower in World War I and averred that it would not happen again. But as everyone knows, it did happen in the last war and the same thing is still happening. In placing a man in his military job, the military continues to place him in some assignment which involves his doing something which does not utilize his civilian training and experience. The military continues to assign persons who were truck drivers in civilian life to jobs as cooks in the armed services, and vice versa. Of course, this involves intensive training and schooling to qualify these men for their newly assigned jobs, and involves an unnecessary amount of teaching personnel, not to mention the waste of time and money, and, in the end, probably, a less efficient worker. The military insist on shaving a square peg to fit a round hole instead of using a round peg which is already available without the necessity of shaving. This shaving process involves an unnecessary waste of manpower, efficiency, time, and money.

This waste goes on and on. They have broken down segregation in the military service to further the social aims of the administration. Be it said to the credit of the military they are not for it, but the executive department has forced it on them. What do we find? In their efforts to get white men in their units, the Air Force, the Navy, and Marine Corps are getting enlistments from schoolboys just before they get out of school so they can fill their quotas. The Army, in order to keep from getting more than its share of Negroes, has raised mental qualifications to such an extent that they are rejecting nearly all Negroes and taking practically all the white boys in the South. Thus, it is easy to see that the breaking down of segregation in the Armed Forces has resulted in a tremendous waste of manpower. In other words, the Air Force, the Navy, and the Marine Corps go out to our colleges, especially in the Southern States, and say to these boys: "Unless you volunteer now you will be drafted and put in the infantry." Many boys volunteer before having finished their college course, and the result is that the Air Force, the Navy, and Marine Corps have been able to eliminate a great percentage of the Negroes throughout the country—taking only a small percentage of them. You will recall that when we were asked to invoke universal military training and the peacetime draft, which I supported, in order to get necessary manpower, the Army, in my opinion, raised the mental standards to eliminate the great mass of Negroes. The records in General Hershey's office will show that from July through October 1950, in some of the Southern States, and one in particular, some 65 percent were rejected when sent to induction centers—4.2 percent were rejected because of physical disabilities and 60.7 percent were rejected because of mental or educational standards. The records will show that some of these Negro boys who had finished high school or junior college made points up to 3 or 4, where the standard was set at 13, the result being that 60 percent were rejected for mental reasons. In my opinion, this raising of the educational standards was only a scheme to eliminate the Negro from the service.

What is happening to this country today is that in the Southern States many Negroes are returning home from induction centers and the country is being stripped of white boys of draft age. The administration and political demagogs of this country, and probably some well-meaning people, have forced upon the military the breaking down of segregation, arguing that it would be a saving of manpower. Instead, however, it has resulted in a waste of manpower beyond anything this country has ever known. I introduced a bill last year and again this year to permit men who register to certify whether or not they favor segregation and to give those who so desired an opportunity to serve in segregated units. I say to you that if the Negroes of the Southern States were given an opportunity to express preference in the matter, it would be found that practically all would be in favor of the segregated unit. I submit that the present policy on segregation is totally unfair to both white and Negro and that it is likewise a tremendous waste of manpower. Today, 48 cents out of every dollar in the present budget is for the military, only 17 cents is for the regular departmental activities. We find that practically all the young men in our Nation, except Negroes, will soon be in the military service, if present policies prevail. It follows that we must take every action to prevent the military from wasting money and manpower because that is where the manpower is and where the money is spent.

Mr. Speaker, we should have an immediate extension of the workweek; we should have an immediate investigation of the use of manpower by the military; we should immediately restore segregation in the armed services, certainly, for those who prefer it; and we should check on the spending policies of the Military Establishment. We are all for national defense but money wasted or manpower wasted helps nothing, but could lead to the destruction of our country.

Mr. Speaker, we owe it to those fine American citizens who have supported us through the years to do everything we can to prevent waste of money and manpower. They are doing their part—we must do ours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is recognized for 30 minutes.

REORGANIZE THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, the United Nations was set up to bring about and sustain peace. The only positive action planned was to resist aggression by force. Nowhere in the debates creating the UN does there appear a single word about reestablishing the boundaries of nations, and reorganizing two or more countries into one.

Can this organization bring about peace? Anyone with half sense ought to know that with Russia holding veto power in the Security Council no peace can ever be established through the UN as it now exists. Russia has a mania for the destruction of religion and the capitalistic system, and since she holds a veto power no peace will be entered into by the action of the United Nations.

If the people of the rest of the world want the United Nations to exist, there must be a reorganization of the whole scheme. Those nations that have an uncompromising ideology which cannot exist with an absolutely opposite system will have to be left out in the reorganization. Those countries like India and Yugoslavia, who want our money but will not vote or act with us, should alter their course or be left out. The other free nations can then set up an organization to deal with those who will not consent to any peace unless it is what they dictate.

This organization could then proceed, and in reorganizing should make perfectly clear what its aims and purposes are. In the present set-up, aggression was to be restrained, but in doing that some UN members seem to feel now that boundaries of nations can be changed and two or more countries welded into one, like North and South Korea one nation when all the World War II Allies had, in effect, agreed on two separate governments. I do not say that dividing the country was right, but it was agreed to. If the new UN wants this power and exercises it, there will be no peace anywhere at any time. It will be the same old grab system that has for centuries impelled stronger nations to destroy smaller ones. We must start on the boundaries existing at the time the organization was created, and if any boundaries are to be moved it must be done with the consent of the people whose countries are to be divided, enlarged, or limited. Surely the UN cannot sit in judgment on local affairs and use its powers to interfere with the internal affairs of any nation.

With a new set-up, it may be possible to establish peace over a part of the world, but with Russia and other obstructionists remaining in the organization, peace will not be established in any country. We are playing directly into their hands in attempting any peace through the UN while Russia is a member. Through the UN, Russia's agents learn all our aims and purposes and soak up information for her own advantage, while we debate ourselves hoarse on propositions that Russia immediately vetoes.

The free nations of the world had better wake up and meet the issue. Russia will not turn aside from her long-nourished aim of putting over her doctrines of antireligion and anticapitalism. She is adamant on this, she is intolerant, she is inexorable and any consent on her part to a pretended peace is only her way of gathering more strength to carry out her will. Let the people of other nations, who refuse the Soviet doctrine, meet this challenge and combine for their own self-protection. Keep Russia out of our councils—make no effort to appease her—rely on no representations she makes—treat her as our deadly enemy, which she is.

Russia does not rely too much on aggression by force, except as she can get her satellites to carry out that action. Her strong aggressive weapon is propaganda. She is criminally intelligent and is one of the greatest opportunists the world has ever seen. In any country, including the United States, where people are in want and cannot be relieved, Russia finds a fertile spot to plant the seeds of communism. She promises reforms—those reforms are needed—distressed people flock to the one promising relief; they embrace her faith; and hence, Russia, without firing a shot, obtains a formidable army of support in any country.

China is a good example. Land reforms were needed in China. Millions were landless, and the feudal owners took most of the crops for the right of peasants to till the land. We recommended to Chiang Kai-shek land reforms, but he refused to comply. He could not, for he would lose the support of powerful landlords and their armies. Russia indoctrinated the Reds of China in land reforms, and the distressed people fell for it and either joined the Reds or refused to fight them. This was a promise, and only a promise, and now the Chinese find that they have surrendered to the Reds, and the promises are still to be fulfilled.

In our fight against the ideology of Russia we want to make sure of the economic conditions and where reforms are necessary put them in, rather than sit back and allow the Soviet to gain the aims by our own foolishness. Promise the poor people of any country that reforms will be introduced, and then actually install the reforms, and the aggression of Russia by propaganda will cease to attract people. If the nations who are banded together for peace do not soon recognize the power of this Soviet propaganda and how they gain followers, the battle against world communism will mount in fury, for the weapons of ideas are stronger than guns. We are abundantly capable of fighting with ideas, but so far we have used them ineffectively and are depending entirely on guns.

If we do not squander our resources and manpower, there is no force in the world today beyond the borders of this country that can offer the potential destruction of this Republic. If it is ever destroyed it will be from within and not from without. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and we should not forget to give our first attention to the United States. This does not mean that we shall not give other countries, striving for liberty, our aid and support to the extent of our ability, but we should not become so involved in other parts of the world that we shall finally be unable to defend ourselves. While the whole world was embroiled in political and religious wars our forefathers fled from that ceaseless turmoil and here in the New World established a people's government, which through its wise management has survived and has made us the most powerful nation in the world. The greater part of our history transpired with the admonitions of Washington and Jefferson constantly reminding us to avoid entanglements with foreign powers.

We left that safe course in 1917 after following their advice for 131 years, and since then we have had 33 years of constant agitation, wars, depressions, wars again, depressions, and now war again. We should take some heed of our error and get back on our historic course. In all those 131 years the name of the United States was held in high regard by most nations of the world, but today after 33 years of a different course we are perhaps the most hated nation among the majority of the inhabitants of the globe. Even those we have tried to help—those to whom we have given our last cent and even went further and plunged ourselves under a stupendous load of debt—even some of them now call us "money-grabbers" who are trying to control the whole world.

Is not it about time to defend America? Those of us who believe in getting back on our historic track of safety are branded as isolationists—that name, some think, is sufficient to squelch the most loyal citizen. To me, I would much rather be called an isolationist than an internationalist who demands that this country, with all its men and money must protect the financial interest of free enterprise in foreign countries.

We do not have to play turtle and back into our shell. We can deal with foreign countries as we always have—we can trade with them—they can trade with us—an honorable trade promotes peace and understanding, but we do not have to enter into every controversy at the far ends of the earth in the name of international trade. It would be much better to have no trade at all than to trade in blood and debts. Our trade for 131 years did not demand this of us, but our new venture in 33 years has cost us the loss of untold thousands of our best men and has placed us under the most staggering debt any country in the history of the world has had to bear.

I repeat, we must not squander our resources and manpower. We should aid the free nations, yes, but we should not become so involved in other parts of the world that we shall finally be unable to defend ourselves.

Personally I do not care what I am called—I intend to fight this new program of all-out world interference and save this Republic. I have no ax to grind, I represent no interests, special or otherwise. I am not elected by any special interest, and hold myself accountable to the people only and to no one else. I am convinced in my own mind that the greatest enemies of this Republic will not be located in foreign countries, but right here at home, and only through such influence will this Republic ever fall.

I think it is impossible for the Communist dictator idea of state enterprise and the capitalistic free enterprise system to exist on this earth without a war in the future—probably for half a century, but eventually these two diametrically opposed ideologies must clash in war. In this country it appeared that after the beginning of this Government in 1787 free States and slave States could live together in peace, and they did so for 72 years, although there was much discontent on both sides right from the beginning and which increased in tempo until Fort Sumter was fired upon. Lincoln saw the picture plainly when he said:

> We cannot remain half free and half slave; we will finally become all one or the other.

That was an issue in the Nation itself and might not be easily applied to a community of nations. Yet, the same principle is there.

Suppose we settle down to the best peace we can get—naturally if there was peace we would be trading with Russia and there will be no time during this exchange of trade that the two opposed policies of operation will not clash. Events of small consequences at first—but gradually becoming more important as time passes and finally there will be a clash to the finish. I think it is possible for this Government to so conduct its business as not to give offense to Russia or any other country, but I am not so sure of the way the Russian Government will be conducted. If it is conducted in the future as it has been up to date, with intrigues and espionage, the two systems will not long remain in a world of peace.

The Russian people themselves may finally get possession of their own government, which they do not have today; then the program of the Russian dictators to propagandize the world may end. In that event, war may be averted.

Those countries who desire and want individual freedom may as well understand just what the Russians want and what they are determined to have and prepare their defenses accordingly. Any nation that will not do so will not have long the power to defend itself.

So far as the United States is concerned, our first duty is to so arm that it will be impossible for the Russians to force their system upon us by force of arms, for after all this United States may well be the last barrier between communism and free enterprise. If this statement is true or ever approaches the truth, we must be more vigilant than ever to see that we do not permit our economic conditions to become intolerable to the people of the United States and thus afford fertile soil where the seeds of communism can be sown.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I am glad to see the gentleman has been stressing the idea of internal security. Does the gentleman feel there is a real danger that we may be dissipating both our manpower and our natural resources?

Mr. BURDICK. I certainly do, or I would not be up here today.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman has made a very instructive talk on this subject. I recall that on one occasion he was a member of a Minnesota football team and was at that time regarded as one of the most valuable players on that team, which, much to my regret, won several conference championships. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that he would not have wanted on that team any fellow that was not playing for Minnesota.

Mr. BURDICK. We did not have anybody on there except that kind.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That was not just a happenstance, was it, that was a policy?

Mr. BURDICK. No; that was premeditated.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The question I wanted to ask was this: We are told, at least I get that idea, that we must not let those 500,000 Chinese soldiers who want to slip across to the mainland and fight the Communists, because it might make the Russians mad. If that is true, does not the gentleman believe it might make Stalin and the Russians a little angry if we send 200,000 men over to confront them in Eastern Europe? How does the gentleman reconcile those two policies?

Mr. BURDICK. I reconcile them by telling the gentleman what Congress does. In order to keep Tito mad at Stalin, we put in $500,000,000. That is all we got out of it, that he is still mad.

We have given Tito $500,000,000 and all he had to give for that was to say he was mad at Stalin. When he got this money he was just as mad as he could be at Stalin. But in the United Nations he votes against us and in Korea he sends no help. Did that $500,000,000 gift help us in any particular, and now very soon Tito will not be as mad as he was unless we send him more money.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I can understand that. That is nothing new. They have been working us ever since 1917 on that theory have they not?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; if we are to buy everybody in the world so that they will be mad at somebody else, we have a big job ahead of us.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. When we buy them, it occurs to me that they ought to stay bought.

Mr. BURDICK. They do not stay bought unless we give them more money.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What do you think of this policy which will not let the Chinese fight the Chinese Communists, and which insists that we send young Americans over to Europe to fight the Communists there?

Mr. BURDICK. If the gentleman remembers I inserted a speech in the RECORD where I advocated the use of these weapons. First, we never could have peace with Japan, with Russia's consent. But we could make peace with her and turn her 5,000,000 men loose to stem this tide of communism. That would be the best way. They want to do it. They are not Communists. They are anti-Communists, and they are champing at the bit, ready to go. But this country does not bring about an understanding with Japan so that they can be turned loose. I would do the same thing with Chiang Kai-shek's troops. I would turn them loose and let them go.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. My point was if we must fight the Communists and shoot a few of them, I am sort of in favor of letting the Chinese and Japanese and anybody else who wants to do it shoot them instead of sending our boys to do it.

Mr. BURDICK. Here is another situation even worse than that, I might state to the gentleman from Michigan. We are holding Japan now as a prisoner of war. She is our ward. Have we any right to hold her defenseless against the hordes of communism? Have we any moral right to do that? I think the thing for this country to do, the morally correct thing, would be to enter into a peace with Japan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I agree with the gentleman on that. I hope he will give us the benefit of his views on subsequent occasions and I hope those occasions will not be too far apart.

Mr. BURDICK. Are there any more questions? I might say I heard a speech out in a mining camp one time. A fellow came along and he was not getting along with the miners anyhow. He started to make a speech and a fellow said, "Well, what about this?" And "What about that?" So the speaker said, "Come right down here to the platform and we will argue this thing out." So the other man went up to the platform and the speaker walloped him one on the jaw and stretched him out. And as he stood over him, straddled out, he said, "Ladies and gentlemen, are there any more questions?"

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. STANLEY, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2141. An act to extend for 2 years the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad; and PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

52. By Mr. FORAND: Resolution entitled "resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to give concentrated attention and effort to the reactivating of the United States Naval Air Station Auxiliary of United States Naval Air Station, Quonset Point, R. I., located in Charlestown, R. I., passed by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at the January session and approved by the Governor on February 10; to the Committee on Armed Services.

53. Also resolution entitled resolution requesting the Members from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to give immediate attention and use their best efforts to have reactivated the naval ordnance plant of the United States Naval Torpedo Station, at Newport, R. I., passed by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at the January session and approved by the Governor on February 10; to the Committee on Armed Services.

54. By Mr. GROSS: Petition of the members of the St. John's Lutheran Ladies Aid and Missionary Society of Plainfield, Iowa, signed by 34 members of that society pleading that everything possible be done to restore peace to the United States of America; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

55. By Mr. MASON: Petition of the grand regent and members of Court De La Salle No. 276, Catholic Daughters of America, La Salle, Ill., asking the Congress to enact legislation declaring Good Friday a national holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

56. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Mr. Rowland F. Cowan, department of adjutant, the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, Trenton, N. J., relative to resolution adopted calling on the United Nations to immediately declare Communist China an aggressor in Korea; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

57. Also, petition of Mr. W. K. Boardman, secretary, Ketchikan Chamber of Commerce, Ketchikan, Alaska, relative to statehood for Alaska; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Alvin E. Houser, D. D., First Christian Church, Elk City, Okla., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who art almighty in heaven and in earth, demonstrate Thy almightiness in earthquake, storm, and rain; but, dear God, demonstrate Thy almightiness also in the lives of nations, and in the lives of the men who direct the destiny of our nations.

Our Father, Thou hast promised where two are in accord concerning anything that they ask of Thee that Thou shalt give it to them. Our Father, we pray that we may be in accord here this morning for peace, for brotherhood, for spiritual values that will renew America and cleanse it of everything that is destroying her.

Our Father, Thou hast said, and Thou hast demonstrated in times past, "If my people who are called by my name will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and forsake their wicked ways, I will hear from heaven and will forgive their sins and will heal their nations."

Our Father, we come to Thee this morning in penitent mood, with contrite hearts, acknowledging our own simpleness, acknowledging our own wickedness, and praying, dear God, that Thou shalt have mercy upon us and time shall be in the future for us to do Thy will, that the kingdom of this world may become the kingdom of our God.

Our Father, we ask divine inspiration upon the President of the United States that Thou shalt give him health, strength, courage, and heavenly vision to know that which is right and good, not only for us in this country but for the nations of the world.

Dear God, bless the leadership of this House and the Senate and every official who has been given authority by the ballot over us. Dear God, bless our homes. Especially do we ask that blessing upon our soldiers on battlefields, upon those who have been injured, and those with whom we have talked in the last few hours, whose hearts are torn and homes are wrenched from natural environments.

Dear God, we ask Thee to accept our penitent prayer this morning and to pour out Thy blessing and Thy holy spirit upon us, that we may have the wisdom and the ability to do Thy will. Watch over us and guide us in Thy love and in divine strength and ability to lead this Nation and the world to greater heights of spirituality and brotherly love.

We ask it in the name of Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord and our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 85) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigations to be made pursuant to House Resolution 80, by the Committee on Public Lands (now comprised of the six former committees on Insular Affairs, Territories, Public Lands, Irrigation and Reclamation, Mines and Mining, and Indian Affairs), acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $50,000, including expenditures for the employment of stenographic and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman of such committee or subcommittee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 11, strike out "or subcommittee."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 118) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations, authorized by House Resolution 28, Eighty-second Congress, incurred by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $75,000, including expenditures for the employment of such experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATIONS BY SELECT COMMITTEE CREATED BY HOUSE RESOLUTION 33

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 113) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation and study to be conducted by the select committee created by House Resolution 33, not to exceed $150,000, including expenditures for the employment of investigators, attorneys, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 3, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

After line 8, insert "That the funds granted may be expended retroactive to January 3, 1951."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 124) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by rule XI (1) (h) incurred by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $210,000, including employment of such experts, special counsel, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, and which shall also be available for expenses incurred by said committee or subcommittees outside the continental limits of the United States shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by said committee and signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 2. The official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, after line 3, insert the following: "The funds granted may be expended retroactive to January 3, 1951."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wish to inquire as to committee activities which require such a large sum of money. Is the chairman of the committee here or someone from the committee who can explain it?

Mr. BURLESON. I understand that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAWSON], is not on the floor. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD], is, however, and I understand he will be glad to explain it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from California explain what the committee contemplates doing? I am not just aware what the committee has in contemplation.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I shall be glad to, Mr. Speaker, to respond to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAWSON], is not here today and I have been asked to act in his place.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments as set up under the Reorganization Act has the responsibility of investigating the expenditures of all the executive departments. We have broken down our main committee into five subcommittees. There are subcommittees chaired by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANHAM], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY], and myself. Mr. HARDY's subcommittee is concerned with the efficiency of Government operations, and in the last Congress they investigated among other matters the Maritime Commission, and made recommendations which we feel saved many millions of dollars.

My committee, the Committee on Executive and Legislative Reorganization, was concerned mostly with the President's plans on reorganizations, including some basic legislation, such as Public Law 152 which set up the General Services Administration and coordinated all of the different housekeeping functions of Government. The Hoover Commission estimated that that act alone would save the Government $250,000,000 annually.

At the present time my subcommittee plans to go into the question of traffic management. As a result of the last war the Department of Justice now has filed suits for over $500,000,000 in refunds involving overcharges by transportation carriers during that war. We are going into the subject of traffic management to see if it is not possible for the Government to set up a traffic-management program similar to programs that are in effect in all the big corporations in America; this we believe will save several hundred million dollars in the emergency we are in now as well as in peacetime years.

We are also going into the subject of congressional reorganization; in other words, a review of the La Follette-Monroney Act, which was passed, as you know, several years ago and which at the present time is the subject of the Senate Committee on Executive Expenditures investigation. We are joining with them in this investigation, and the Members of the House will have an opportunity to come before this joint committee of the House and Senate and testify with reference to their ideas as to how the function of Congress can be improved in regard to staffing, committee structure, and so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman thinks we can make some real savings as the result of his committee's work?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I state unreservedly that the work of the Committee on Expenditures in investigating expenditures in executive departments will save many millions of dollars. We have proven that in the last 2 years, and we feel we can in the next 2 years do an equally good job.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman and his committee looking over the President's budget to any degree? You know we hope we can save some money. The President has dared us to make a savings.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. We feel that is within the jurisdiction of the House Committee on Appropriations rather than our committee. We are more interested in investigating waste and inefficiency in Government operations after the appropriations are made rather than in trying to limit appropriations which we feel lies within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman for his information that the committee was really set up to scrutinize the various departments of Government in the hope that we could make some saving. We did not expect it would depend entirely on the Appropriations Committee so far as economies in Government are concerned.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I may say that we are doing that in this way: All of the reports of the General Accounting Office are referred to our committee and such criticisms as the General Accounting Office makes of the operation of any executive department is referred to our committee. The various subcommittees immediately take those reports, investigate them, and see if we can correct the situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not interested in criticism. What I am interested in is getting some real savings, and it is my hope the committee will do that.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is the primary purpose of our committee, and I assure the gentleman we will work very hard on that point.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ALBERT. Is not the matter of studying the reorganization of Congress within the province of the House Committee on Administration rather than the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I will say that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has the jurisdiction of reorganization of both the legislative and the executive branches. The La Follette-Monroney Act was passed through the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and all of the President's reorganization plans enacting laws under the authority of the basic Reorganization Act, were passed through the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Forty Republican heads of organizations and clubs in Massachusetts came on with their hatchets and thoroughly approved this legislation.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. It is my understanding that the so-called Williams subcommittee has contended in various reports filed with the House that a great percentage of executive agencies at this time are overstaffed, and great savings can be made in the current budget and the budget for the new fiscal year.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARDY. I think that this discussion has pointed up the urgency for more funds for this committee and for a larger staff of this committee if it is going to be enabled to carry out its mandate under the Reorganization Act. The Government is so big there is no limit to what can be done, and because of matters such as this there is the necessity for getting funds in order to employ qualified personnel.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ALBERT. I would like to ask what the source of the authority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to go into the matter of legislative reorganization is. That clearly comes within the province of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. In the provision of rule XI, which outlines the function of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the following subjects are considered as within their jurisdiction:

Budget and accounting measures, other than appropriations.

Reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government.

Such committee shall have the duty of—

Receiving and examining reports of the Comptroller General of the United States and of submitting such recommendations to the House as it deems necessary or desirable in connection with the subject matter of such reports;

Studying the operation of Government activities at all levels with a view of determining its economy and efficiency; and Evaluating the effects of laws enacted to reorganize the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

That is the particular point the gentleman from Oklahoma is concerned with and clearly defines the jurisdiction of our Committee on Legislative and Executive Reorganization.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE USE OF CHEMICALS IN FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 128) and ask for its immediate consideration:

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, effective from January 3, 1951, the expenses of conducting the investigation and study authorized by House Resolution 323 of the Eighty-first Congress and continued by House Resolution 74 of the Eighty-second Congress, incurred by the Select Committee To Investigate the Use of Chemicals in Food Products, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $75,000, in addition to the unexpended balance of the sum made available for conducting such investigation and study during the Eighty-first Congress, including expenditures for the employment of investigators, attorneys, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the chairman of such committee, signed by the chairman of such committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after "$75,000", strike out all down to and including the word "Congress" in line 10.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE EDUCATION, TRAINING, AND LOAN GUARANTY PROGRAMS OF VETERANS

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 133) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation and study to be conducted by the select committee created by House Resolution 93 not to exceed $60,000, including expenditures for the employment of investigators, attorneys, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

That the funds granted may be expended retroactive to January 3, 1951.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. ANNIE L. BOURKE

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 138) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mrs. Annie L. Bourke, widow of Robert J. Bourke, late an employee of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to 6 months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death and an additional amount not to exceed $350 toward defraying the funeral expenses of said Robert J. Bourke.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE LATE CHARLES R. ROBERTSON

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce the death of a former Member of this body, Charles R. Robertson, of North Dakota. Many Members on the floor today have served with him.

Mr. Robertson was born in Wisconsin in 1889. He was educated in the common schools of Wisconsin and was a graduate of Parker College in Minnesota.

He became identified with the mercantile business and held important positions of trust with business firms at Winnebago, Fergus Falls, St. Paul in Minnesota, and Aberdeen, S. Dak. His first lone venture was the establishing of a ready-to-wear store at Aberdeen and Redfield, S. Dak. Later, his success in business enabled him to operate department stores at Valley City, Wahpeton, Jamestown, and Bismarck.

He was married to Mary Armstrong, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. J. Armstrong, of Kansas City, Mo. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a member of the following fraternal orders: Masons, Rotary, Elks, and Eagles. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1940. There being a vacancy on the Republican ticket in the fall of 1940, the Republican State executive committee selected Charles Robertson for the vacancy and he was elected to the Seventy-seventh Congress, filling the place occupied so long by William Lemke, who had withdrawn his name on the congressional ticket to run for Senator.

In 1942 Charles Robertson received the endorsement of the Nonpartisan Republicans but was defeated in the primary election by William Lemke.

In 1944, USHER L. BURDICK became a candidate for Senator and Charles Robertson again received the League endorsement, won, and was elected to the Seventy-ninth Congress and reelected to the Eightieth Congress.

Charles Robertson was a most affable and agreeable gentleman and made friends easily. He probably had more personal friends at home and in Washington than anyone who ever represented North Dakota in the Congress of the United States.

He was stricken with a heart attack just prior to his passing and expired in his sleep at Bismarck, N. Dak., Sunday, February 18, 1951.

The State and Nation have lost a valuable citizen and his many friends at home and here in this House will grieve his passing.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PRIEST. I appreciate the opportunity to join with the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota in paying a tribute to the memory of Charles Robertson. He came to the Seventy-seventh Congress at the same time I came. There developed between us a personal friendship which meant a great deal to me. He was, as the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota has said, one of the kindest and most genuinely sincere men I ever knew.

He was conscientious in the time and effort he gave to the work of his committee, and in the discharge of his responsibilities as a Member of the House of Representatives. It was with a sense of deep grief that I learned of his death, and my most sincere sympathy is extended to his family.

Mr. AANDAHL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. AANDAHL. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I received word of the sudden and unexpected death of Charles R. Robertson, who was a Member of this body during the Seventy-seventh, Seventy-ninth, and Eightieth Congresses.

Charlie Robertson was a resident of North Dakota for a good many years. He was an able, ambitious, and prosperous businessman, who established some of the finest clothing stores that we have had in the State, and who at the time of his death, had the outstanding Robertson's store at Bismarck.

Charlie was an ardent and fervent supporter of the American system. He knew that if this country is going to continue its outstanding prosperity and its abundant opportunities for all people, the free-enterprise system would have to be preserved.

Particularly after his membership in Congress, which started in 1941, he was most active in community, State, and National affairs, giving support and encouragement to those ideals of economic order and the relationship and influence that Government should have upon them.

Charlie was able and energetic. He effectively fostered and promoted the objectives that he had in mind. He was a member of Freedom Train Committee of the State of North Dakota. He was North Dakota chairman of the Commission for Economic Development and Citizen's Committee of Hoover Commission. His death is a great loss, not only to his family and many personal friends, but also to the State of North Dakota, and this great Nation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I join with the North Dakota delegation in these ceremonies occasioned by the death of a great American and a warm, personal friend. Charlie Robertson came to the House of Representatives with a fine business experience. He had but one ambition, and that was to serve his day and generation to the best of his ability. He made many warm friends in the House who came to know his great patriotism, his outstanding ability, and his eagerness to serve his country. His untimely death is a great loss to all of us. It is a loss to the State of North Dakota, and to our country. The world is richer for his having lived. To his wife and family we extend our deepest sympathy in their hour of bereavement.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I concur in everything that has been said by my colleagues about our friend, Charlie Robertson. I was very close to Charlie Robertson while he was a Member of Congress. We became well acquainted. I knew the heartbeats in his breast; he was a gentleman and a patriot of the highest order. Charlie Robertson was the kind of man who tried in every way he possibly could to be of benefit to his State and his Nation. I was shocked when I learned that my good friend Charlie Robertson had passed away. I grieve with his good wife and family and his multitude of friends in North Dakota and all over the Nation. Charlie had many friends, and his friends knew and loved him. They knew he lived and worked and carried on in a manner which was pleasing, not only to the people on this earth, but to God in heaven.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have the privilege of extending their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the Members of this body who was privileged to serve here with Charlie Robertson, of North Dakota. I can say honestly that this association and fine privilege has made of me a better man.

Charlie Robertson brought to the House of Representatives that degree of competence and understanding typical of the best among this membership. He had proved himself in the field of private endeavor. He was a successful man; he was a man of deep understanding, great wisdom, and capacity. He brought all three to his service here in the House of Representatives. Beyond that, he brought here a deep dedication to principle. Many times do I recall talking to him about troublesome matters that were coming before the House of Representatives. Many times have I heard him say that political consequences mean nothing to me. The guiding principle in all his deliberations was to come up with the right answer. Having once satisfied himself on the correctness of his position, he made that position known without fear or equivocation.

I know of nothing more complimentary that could be said of a Member who has passed from our ranks.

I join with those who have spoken before me in expressing profound sorrow at the passing of our one-time colleague, and in expressing my sympathy to his family and his host of friends.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. There was nothing of sham or pretense in the make-up of Charlie Robertson. He was genuine and sound. He was my friend and I loved him.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of serving on the Appropriations Committee and on one of the subcommittees with Charlie Robertson. I did not know of his death until I came to the floor this morning. I am truly shocked.

He was unquestionably one of the ablest men on our committee. He was a devoted public servant. In addition he was a very affable person. He was every inch a true gentleman.

I share the sorrow of his family and his many friends in this hour of his departure.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, few men in this House knew Charlie Robertson better than I did. At the time he served, this country was going through a battle to turn back the tide of communistic fanaticism with which we were then threatened. The Committee on Un-American Activities was attacked by every enemy within our gates. Charlie Robertson was one of our greatest supporters.

He was a great American. He put the welfare of his country above all other considerations.

I wish we had more men like him today.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART], one of Charlie Robertson's closest personal friends in and out of Congress.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, Charles Robertson's district adjoined mine. When I first came to Congress he took an interest in my welfare and in my service in this body. I came to know him and have a high regard for him because of the help he rendered me as a new Member of this Congress.

I am glad to have this opportunity today to join with my colleagues and pay my respects to him and the service he rendered this country, the service he rendered his State, and the fellowship and the friends he made in this House.

I also wish to extend my sympathy to his family in their loss at this time.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of serving with Charles Robertson. I regarded him as one of the soundest men with whom I ever became acquainted in legislative affairs; he was truly a great American.

As my beloved friends, such as he, pass away I think of our great Republic as something that is practically immortal if we perform our duty as he performed his, if we stand by the just principles which we find embodied in our charter of liberties. It is said that the men who worked upon the Parthenon, the most beautiful structure in the world, were so blinded by the dust and confusion of their chiseling of the marble that they never saw even in dimmest outline the beautiful structure they had created. That is so with regard to our great Republic; men come and go, they labor for a while; they adhere to principles; they add to its prestige, its honor, and glory as they should. They pass to the great beyond; other patriotic laborers take their place. None of us will ever see the beauty of the great structure upon which we labor, known as the American Republic.

I join with my colleagues in extending deepest sympathy to Mrs. Robertson and the members of her bereaved family.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I, too, remember our former colleague from North Dakota. I hold him in highest respect. He came out of the great West and was so typical of that region. I join with my colleagues from North Dakota in paying tribute to him today. He was a level-headed businessman, wise in counsel, and one of our best Members in any committee work in which he and I were associated.

I extend my sympathy to his family and his friends. I realize that North Dakota has lost a distinguished citizen and the Nation suffers greatly in the loss.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I, too, knew Charles R. Robertson well. We entered the House together as Members of the Seventy-seventh Congress and I was immediately drawn to him because of his friendly smile, his gentlemanly attitude, and his intense desire to be right in the service of our common country.

When I was made chairman of the Treasury-Post Office subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee in the Eightieth Congress, I urged the then chairman of the full committee, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to name Mr. Robertson as another majority member. He did so and I shall always remember Charlie Robertson's devotion to his assignment. "Call on me for any service; I'll work day and night," were his first words as we started hearings in 1947.

This patriotic son of North Dakota, both of whose parents were born in Ayrshire, Scotland, had worked his way up to a position of leadership in the business world. He knew that Lenin had expressed the thought that America would be ruined on the banks of insolvency. We had in the Congress no greater pleader for Federal economies. It was a theme that he continued to stress to the very end.

There was something Lincolnesque in Charlie Robertson's dealings with his fellow man. He could be calm and patient. He could be witty. More than anything else, he was anxious to inflict no wrong—no injury—upon anyone. He had an abiding faith in Almighty God.

I mourn the passing of this fine Christian gentleman and my heart goes out to Mrs. Robertson in her great loss and sorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, Charles Robertson was a fine, kind man. His service in Congress was of a high order. He was honest, intelligent, and a good legislator. To his family goes my deepest sympathy.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

ESTATE OF JAMES PATRICK HACKETT ET AL.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 574) for the relief of the estate of James Patrick Hackett and Charles L. Stover.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,285.70 to the estate of James Patrick Hackett and the sum of $4,500 to Charles L. Stover, East Keansburg, N. J. The payment of such sums shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States and Sgt. William A. McQueen on account of personal injuries, and medical and funeral expenses sustained when they were struck by a United States Army vehicle while they were walking on Route 35, Middletown, N. J., on January 21, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRED E. WEBER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Fred E. Weber.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Fred E. Weber, Bradley Beach, Monmouth County, N. J., the sum of $4,226. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Fred E. Weber against the United States on account of personal injuries, medical expenses, property damage, and loss of earnings sustained by him when the automobile which he was driving on Central Avenue in the borough of Bradley Beach, was in collision with a United States Army truck on January 1, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALASKA JUNEAU GOLD MINING CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 596) for the relief of the Alaska Juneau Gold Mining Co., of Juneau, Alakska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Alaska Juneau Gold Mining Co., a corporation of Juneau, Alaska, the sum of $80,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for crushed rock, building materials, and services furnished the United States for use in urgently needed defense projects, including construction of the subport of embarkation, air-landing fields, and so forth, at Juneau, Alaska, and in the vicinity during the period from June 1, 1942, to February 1, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIM OF ALVIN SMITH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 599) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of Delaware to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Alvin Smith, of New Castle, Del., arising out of the damage sustained by him as a result of the construction and maintenance of the New Castle United States Army Air Base, New Castle, Del.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the jurisdiction conferred upon the United States District Court of the District of Delaware by subsection (b) of section 1346, title 28, United States Code, is hereby extended to a civil action, which may be commenced not later than 1 year after the enactment of this act, asserting any claim or claims of Alvin Smith, of New Castle, Del., against the United States for money damages arising out of property damage sustained by him as a result of the construction and maintenance of the New Castle United States Army Air Base, New Castle, Del.: Provided, That the exception set forth in section 2680 (a), title 28, United States Code, shall not apply to the action authorized under this act. Except as otherwise provided in this act, all provisions of law applicable in and to such subsection and applicable to judgments therein and appeals therefrom, are hereby made equally applicable in respect of the civil action authorized by this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this act does or shall constitute an admission of liability on the part of the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASPINALL: Page 2, line 4, after the word "Delaware", strike out the colon, insert a period and strike out: "Provided, That the exception set forth in section 2680 (a), title 28, United States Code, shall not apply to the action authorized under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN P. HAYES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 613) for the relief of John P. Hayes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John P. Hayes, postmaster at Albany, N. Y., is relieved of all liability to refund to the United States the sum of $933.89. Such sum represents a shortage at the Albany post office due to the embezzlement of postal funds by a former clerk in the money-order section of that post office who has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for such embezzlement. The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to credit the account of John P. Hayes in the sum of $933.89.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to the estate of Lourdine Livermore, of Long Beach, Calif., and to pay the sum of $10,000 to the estate of Dorothy E. Douglas, of Long Beach, Calif., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of the said Lourdine Livermore and Dorothy E. Douglas sustained as a result of being shot by Lt. Beauford G. Swancutt of the United States Army, on March 5, 1944, at Camp Anza, Riverside, Calif.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$6,701.62."

STATE COMPENSATION INSURANCE FUND OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 680) for the relief of the State Compensation Insurance Fund of California.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State Compensation Insurance Fund of California the sum of $478.13. Such sum represents the total amount paid by the said State Compensation Insurance Fund of California, as follows:

(1) To Allen D. Cameron, California, and Earle P. Schouten, California, for compensation and medical treatment on account of injuries sustained on February 3, 1939, when the automobile in which they were riding was in collision on the State highway near Vacaville, Calif., with a truck operated in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps. At the time of such accident, the said Allen D. Cameron and Earle P. Schouten were employees of the San Rafael Military Academy, San Rafael, Calif., and the sum of $382.10 was paid to them by the said State compensation insurance fund under its workmen's compensation insurance policy with the said San Rafael Military Academy;

(2) To Officer Everett Ingram, of the California Highway Patrol, for compensation and medical treatment on account of injuries sustained on August 25, 1941, when the motorcycle on which he was riding was in collision on the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, with a truck operated in the service of the United States Army, and the sum of $81.78 was paid to him by the said State Compensation Insurance Fund under its workmen's compensation insurance policy; and

(3) To the State department of motor vehicles for damage to the motorcycle on which Officer Ingram was riding, the sum of $14.25: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. ALICE N. KOZMA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 706) for the relief of Mrs. Alice N. Kozma.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Mrs. Alice N. Kozma, of Millfield, Ohio, for personal injuries, medical and hospital expenses sustained as a result of an accident involving a United States Army truck near Gulfport, Miss., on July 12, 1944.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES W. WULF

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 712) for the relief of Charles W. Wulf, warrant officer, junior grade, United States Air Force.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, to Charles W. Wulf, warrant officer, junior grade, United States Air Force, of 61 Maxwell Avenue, Rochester, N. Y., such sum as certified by the Department of the Army, which has been deducted from his salary, and it is hereby authorized and directed that the Secretary of the Army credit the account of the said Charles W. Wulf with such balance as is alleged to be due by him, in connection with certain shortages, due to the misappropriation of funds by subordinates, for which he is held accountable.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PEERLESS OIL CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 721) for the relief of the Peerless Oil Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Peerless Oil Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $2,320.03. Such sum is claimed by such corporation to be equitably due and payable to it by reason of an increase in the price of oil sold by it from April to June 1942, to the Department of War under authority of Office of Price Administration amendments 4 and 10 to Revised Price Schedule No. 88. Such increase was incorporated by subsequent amendment into contract Tps 45255 for the purchase of such oil as aforesaid. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims under such contract. No part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARLO DE LUCA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 723) for the relief of Carlo de Luca.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon, notwithstanding the bars or defenses of res judicata, lapse of time, laches, or any settlement or adjustment heretofore made, the claim of Carlo de Luca arising out of an error alleged to have been made by the Court of Claims in computing the amount of damages awarded him in a judgment rendered on December 7, 1936. The court shall have such jurisdiction if suit is instituted within 120 days after the date of enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JULIA BUSCH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 727) for the relief of Julia Busch.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Julia Busch, of Little Falls, N. Y., the proceeds of National Service Life Insurance Policy No. N-14184877, issued to Clifford J. MerCarter, late private, Company H, Two Hundred and Seventy-Third Infantry, United States Army, who was killed in action in Italy, on February 11, 1944. Although the said Julia Busch was designated by the insured as beneficiary of such policy, her claim for payment thereunder was disallowed by the Veterans' Administration on the ground that she did not stand in loco parentis to the insured within the meaning of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, because such relationship did not have its conception during the minority of the insured.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS A. TRULOVE ET AL.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 745) for the relief of Thomas A. Trulove, postmaster, and Nolen J. Salyards, assistant postmaster, at Inglewood, Calif.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas A. Trulove, postmaster, and Nolen J. Salyards, assistant postmaster, at Inglewood, Calif., are hereby relieved of all liability to refund to the United States any funds over and above the amount of money collected from Andrew O. Benson, Jr., or his sureties because of his embezzlements of Government funds while a clerk in the Inglewood, Calif., post office. The sureties of the said postmaster and assistant postmaster are released from any liability to refund to the United States the whole or any part of the amount of the embezzlements not collected from Andrew O. Benson, Jr., or his sureties and the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to credit the account of the postmaster with this sum.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARRIS A. BAKKEN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 746) for the relief of Harris A. Bakken.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Harris A. Bakken, of Wilmington, Calif., formerly sales officer at Vancouver Barracks, Wash., is relieved of all liability to refund to the United States the sum of $3,692.80. Such sum represents the amount for which he is accountable because of a shortage in his accounts. The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to allow credit in the settlement of the accounts of the said Harris A. Bakken in the sum of $3,692.80.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN BARREL CO., INC.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 774) for the relief of the American Barrel Co., Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $29,292.10 to the American Barrel Co., Inc., of Boston, Mass., in full settlement of all claims against the United States as reimbursement for the purchase of surplus steel drums from the Department of State, Office of the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner, under contracts numbered W-ANL (ETO-II) 3831 and W-ANL (ETO-II) 4125, dated October 30, 1947, and February 12, 1948. Such reimbursement is due to erroneous representations made that the said steel drums were in usable condition and it was determined that they were worthless: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. MARTHA W. JOHNSON

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 848) for the relief of Mrs. Martha W. Johnson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Martha W. Johnson, of Celeron, N. Y., the sum of $200. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Mrs. Martha W. Johnson against the United States on account of personal injuries sustained by her, on February 16, 1946, when she fell to the street while leaving the United States post office at Jamestown, N. Y.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

MRS. ROSE A. MONGRAIN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 857) for the relief of Mrs. Rose A. Mongrain.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Rose A. Mongrain, Lowell, Mass., the sum of $3,940.05. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Mrs. Rose A. Mongrain against the United States on account of personal injuries sustained by her on June 15, 1944, when she slipped and fell on the wet floor of the lobby of the main post office building in Lowell, Mass.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary nowithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$3,940.05" and insert "$2,540.05."

LOUIS R. CHADBOURNE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 971) for the relief of Louis R. Chadbourne.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Louis R. Chadbourne, of Medford, Mass., the sum of $8,923.92. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Louis R. Chadbourne against the United States for additional pay and allowances for the period between November 19, 1945, the date of his release from active duty as lieutenant commander, United States Naval Reserve, and March 1, 1949, the date as of which he was transferred to the retired list pursuant to the finding of a naval retiring board that his physical disability was service incurred: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after "United States", strike out the balance of the line down to and including the word "incurred" in line 3, page 2, and insert "as retroactive retirement pay from March 1, 1949, to the date of his release from active duty September 19, 1945."

The SPEAKER. That completes the call of bills on the Private Calendar.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, universal military training should be enacted into law at the earliest practicable moment in view of the critical situation which our country faces.

To require by law that the flower of our youth should devote from 22 to 24 months of their time to the service of their country is most distressing. It is not at all palatable to many of these young men, as well as to members of their families. Many fathers and mothers, who have worked tirelessly for several years to offer opportunities to their sons, dread the thought of these boys having to serve in the Armed Forces as a result of a peacetime draft. Plans have been made in many instances for the son to carry on the business of farming operations which his father has built through many years of toil and hard work.

The question comes down to this: Is it necessary for the protection of America to invoke such a far-reaching proposal as is involved in a universal military training program? When an adequate supply of manpower is made available through the medium of universal military training, there is a good chance of avoiding world war III. Our allies also should build what General Eisenhower called a wall of peace. The Soviet military power has been strengthened considerably in recent months. There is no United States monopoly on the atomic bomb. Satellites of the Soviet Union have shown a readiness to acquire new territory by aggressive action through invasion of a neighboring country. General Eisenhower states that it is necessary for America to stand by in a partially mobilized state for a number of years. If this be true, it is most essential that a long-time plan of universal military training be devised.

The universal military training program should not be confused with an extension of the Selective Service Act by mobilizing the manpower of the country on a total basis. Should we become engaged in a world war III, that is an entirely different matter. In discussing the passage of the universal military training legislation, it involves partial mobilization for a long-drawn-out time of international unrest, strain, and stress. The danger of America becoming involved in a global war is such a serious matter that our young men should have the proper military training for their own protection, as well as to provide adequate defense for the Nation. There will be a feeling of confusion and uncertainty in many families throughout America until such time as this problem is settled by both Houses of Congress. When the system begins fully to work, every young man on reaching his eighteenth birthday, or on finishing high school, whichever is later, should expect to enter the service of his country. Under the present system of selective service, a young man who has attained the draft-eligible age lives in uncertainty from mail to mail. This unrest exists in college, business, and industry. Universal military training would distribute the responsibility among all young men of America. The inductee realizes in the beginning his service is for a definite length of time. This universal military training service would come right after the completion of his high-school courses and prior to his entrance into college or business.

To look forward to a universal military training program may be a bitter pill to swallow. There is, however, an urgent need to build up over a long period of years a reservoir of trained manpower. It is the contention of those of us who support universal military training that for this country to provide such a force of trained personnel may be a decisive factor in avoiding an all-out war.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REAMS asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday, February 27, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, many of the eastern peoples have always believed in the teaching of reincarnation, which affirms that men live more than one life here on earth, and that the events and destiny of the next life are conditioned by the behavior and events in former lives. In other words, one might think of an entire lifetime as a day in school, and that each life might inculcate some lesson, good or evil, in the age-old quest of the human pilgrim for his Holy Grail.

Implicit in this idea, of course, would be its natural corollary, that if one lived enough lives, he would eventually graduate with the rank of master. Having attained this high spiritual goal, he would then go forth into the world of men to teach and lead his brethren in the world, so that those who would be capable of accepting his teaching would in their turn in time attain a similar mastership.

Naturally men differ, as do stars in their magnitude and capabilities. One may become a great poet, a great writer, a Beethoven in the realm of music, a Copernicus in astronomy, an Einstein in physics, an Osler in medicine, an Edison in research. Or he might be a great leader of men, capable of leading a trusting people in a long struggle to win their liberty from their oppressors, and finally establish them under the aegis of a great constitution.

Grateful peoples have not always been so peculiarly blessed as we are by being able to preserve the mementos of the founder of their country as you have here in Washington. The destruction of wars, the ravages of time, and even the human element of neglect have frequently effaced the physical evidences of the greatness of the progenitors of a nation.

And let me say right here that to me the important thing in these physical reminder of the great is the place rather than the thing. Let me illustrate what I mean. Have you ever gone into some old church, within which the devotional thoughts of thousands of simple worshippers have risen to the heavenly throne for scores or perhaps hundreds of years? The very air is redolent with the sacred aura of prayer, even as the sacred incense clouds the altars of Buddha in some eastern temple.

Doubtless this was the true meaning of the holy of holies of the Temple of Solomon. The solemn and trembling thoughts of the blood-washed high priest as he walked into the most holy place with slow and stately tread, carrying with him the penitent prayers of the worshipping multitude without, perhaps constituted the real flame of the Shekina between the extended wings of the cherubim.

During my first visit to Alexandria in 1934, when I visited the sacred lodge room where George Washington had presided as master, the experience moved me more deeply than anything else before or since. I could envisage the presence of that great man and great Mason presiding in the east over his lodge, calling them from work to prayer. I could almost hear the sound of the gavel as he proclaimed order after order of business completed.

I am not finding fault with the removal of those sacred relics to the new Washington Memorial. But the thought has occurred to me what a grand thing it would have been if it had been possible to move the building, or at least the lodge room, bodily as well as the furniture of the lodge. When I saw those Masonically priceless mementos, I missed the remembrance of the very presence of George Washington within his own lodge room as I had experienced it in his old lodge.

Students of comparative religion find much to interest them in the great world religions of the past. Sometimes the ideas inculcated in these old philosophies strike out with peculiar force, and they seem to be very apt in explaining many modern things. I am mindful of the old Chinese religious system of Confucius, taught 500 years before the Christian era.

Implicit in that body of thought is the idea of "the perfect man," which means that to be a truly religious man one must also be a perfect gentleman, a perfect man of the world. He must not only be a gentleman; he must be a polished gentleman. In fact, the whole training received by a Chinese of the old school was to enable him to become such a polished man of the world, courteous, urbane, mindful of his elders, self-effacing, and thinking much of the well-being of those with whom he was brought into contact.

George Washington was a Christian gentleman; his name on the pew in Christ Church would indicate that. But his urbanity, his hospitality, and extreme sociability make me think he would have been a perfect disciple of Confucius. Washington, the perfect gentleman, without stain and without reproach.

There are two men of this time who impress me as standing head and shoulders above their fellows: Washington and Franklin. Washington was the peerless leader, the man of action, the great American Fabius. Franklin was the thinker, the philosopher, with a most tremendous capacity in understanding men, and sometimes women. He was to provide the philosophic background for the Revolution: Washington was to execute the great undertaking. Such plays are rarely carried to completion through the efforts of one man alone.

Another thing also impresses me in a study of the life of Washington. By birth, and perhaps inclination he was an aristocrat. His fortunes lay more securely with those of the rest of the landed gentry in Virginia. He was flesh of their flesh. It is thinkable that if he had cast his lot with the Tories of those days, and there were many of them, we might still be an appendage of the British crown. One must think that his constant familiarity with the forest in his early surveying days, his contacts with the simple trappers and homesteaders of what was then the West, must have imbued him with the spirit of freedom, and that he was thus taught that this marvelous land had little in common with the stuffed shirts of the Georgian system in England.

Certain it is that Washington became closely acquainted with the forests. He lived in God's temple, and slept beneath its architraves. The trees whispered to him the future message of freedom, and the natural yearning of the human soul to be the master of its own fate.

My work has brought me much in contact with the Forest Service men of the West. I think they are the finest body of men to be found anywhere in the world. They have learned nobility of soul from the forest giants, they have grasped the lesson of cooperative democracy from the growing things in the woods. They have learned they must cooperate with their fellow men in the forests to preserve their existence. They must share the forest cabin. They must preserve the sanctity of the blazed trail, and they must respect each other's marks if they would live. I can understand well the greatness and sublimity of the early training of Washington, brethren. I have seen it exemplified a thousand times in the 41 years I have been the surgeon for the Forest Service in Idaho.

And these forest-trained individuals are natural handlers of men. Mediocrity begs for cooperation; greatness commands it; the great leader does not ask for discipline; his men instinctively yield it. I have known of many instances in the forests of the West where intelligent and intrepid rangers have led their crews out of fire traps when it seemed impossible to stave off disaster. I have also known of cases where partial crews without such leaders have lost control of themselves and have run straight into the fire. While not too much has been written of this phase of Washington's life, I am persuaded that his superb qualities of leadership were engendered and developed by his engineering experiences in the forests he knew so well.

And so when the Revolution came, and an experienced leader was needed, what more natural than that his people should turn to George Washington. Of excellent birth and breeding, trained in the social graces, well schooled in self-control, with great courage and discretion, with the military experiences already gained in the colonial wars, who could have been better than he for the job?

There is an old saying that "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." And so it seemed in this case. Here was this land of ours owing fealty to a foreign government "whose morning drumbeats, rising with the sun, and keeping company with the hours, encircled the earth with one continuous strain of the martial airs of England." Its armies had received experience on a hundred battlefields, and its coffers had been enriched by the loot of India and the east. Its generals were experienced leaders, and it seemed there could be but one outcome of the ill-starred Revolution. As is frequently the case, there were many living in America, even as today, who were receiving their life's blood through uncut umbilical cords binding them to a foreign power, so that a life apart from the mother country was unthinkable for them. Even as we do now, the soldiers of George Washington suffered more from the divided allegiance of these hybrids than from the red-coated armies of Britain.

The old Greek legend had it that the armies of Deucalion being hard pressed in their war against the aborigines seized stones and threw them backward over their shoulders. Each stone, on striking the earth, sprang into being as a warrior fully panoplied for combat, and the battle was won through the assistance of these rock men.

So it was with the army of George Washington. Small in numbers, poorly clad, without money, and insufficiently armed, everything seemed to be against them. But like the army of Deucalion, everywhere they campaigned, recruits seemed to spring from the earth. And while these newcomers were not trained soldiers, they were dead shots. They brought their squirrel guns with them and their hunting clothes. They had been inured to hardship and many of them had learned the Indian style of fighting with George Washington in the French and Indian War. Their colonial style of fighting went far to compensate for the superior regimented training in the British Army.

The tides of battle surged backward and forward. The Fabian tactics of Washington frequently wrested victory from defeat, and finally he received the surrender of the British Army at Yorktown. The shouting and tumult was over, the smoke of battle cleared away, Washington had created a new country, a new power on the earth, our beloved America. Even he probably could not have visualized that morning at Yorktown, as he proudly and magnanimously returned the sword of General Cornwallis, just what he had accomplished in the history of the world by his campaigns. He was never to see our marvelous flag with its 13 bars and 48 stars. But that was immanent in that historic surrender at Yorktown, and the Almighty under whose banner he had really fought knew what the long-term fruits of that victory were to be.

The Revolution was successful. A new country was born. A new phenomenon had occurred. Scattered over a wide extent of largely undeveloped country, without well-defined means of communication, were scattered islands of English, Irish, Scotch, German, Polish, French, and Dutch, each maintaining part of their birthright and social customs, but more or less united in a fierce love of liberty. They had left their mother countries to seek that boon, and while they were entirely unschooled in the art of organizing their freedom and liberties they were united in one aim—they knew what they wanted.

To unite these scattered and valiant settlers in the form under which these new-found liberties could be secured to them and their children's children was the new task of Washington. Fortunately, he was able to secure the intellectual training of Jefferson, the wisdom of Franklin, the natural genius of Hamilton, the suavity of Madison, and a host of others, each one of whom had something to add in the framing of that marvelous document, the Constitution of the United States.

During the Constitutional Convention, even as now, there were those who wished to make a power state out of this beloved land. They even went further than that and offered George Washington kingship. On the other hand, Thomas Jefferson wrought for the rights of the people and the States. Finally, there was evolved a magnificent compromise which gave power to a strong central government to do those things which would be implicit in any such conglomerated government as our own, but secured to the sovereign people of the States all other rights not specifically delegated to the central government. The immortal document ensouled a fine governmental system of checks and balances, so that liberty could thrive in the new government if its citizens adhered to the framework of the Constitution.

Lord Macaulay, the British historian of those times, prophesied that this Government could not long endure, because "it is all sail and no anchor." It was his thought that the electorate was not generally intelligent enough to govern itself, and that due to the unchecked will of the people to loot their Government, that either the plundered Government would become bankrupt, or some strong central figure would arise to seize power as the man on horseback. Because of the inertia of the people refusing to make freedom their daily job or, in other words, the working out of the principle of "let George do it" would wreck the newly formed Government which had cost the founding fathers so much in blood and suffering to carve out for their posterity. You may draw your own conclusions as to how closely this prophecy has been realized.

It has always been a remarkable thing to me how closely the newly formed Government followed the pattern laid down in our Masonic lodges. It is probable that Masonic procedure played a great part in the deliberations at the Constitutional Convention, and tended to shape the decisions there, for after all a majority of the Constitution-makers were Masons. To a Mason the practice of leaving the entire body of rights not intelligently surrendered to the Federal Government for a very definite purpose in the hands of the sovereign people should be well understood. It was nothing new in a Masonic lodge. The ultimate power was, is, and let us hope ever shall be, on the floor of the lodge.

When George Washington was elected the first President, there must have been a great feeling of security and safety among those early greats in our country. Masonry had received his obligation at its altar. He had advanced enough to be chosen as the master of his lodge. The enormous body of the Masonic builders of the new Government knew full well his actions as a President would still be bounded within the points of the extended compass.

Nor did the great Washington disappoint them. He followed a course of rectitude of conduct and governmental sagacity which his brethren had every reason to expect he would manifest. His entire life history could hardly result in our regarding him in any other way than as the Father of his Country. We have had Masonic Presidents since, but their course of action has not always manifested to the people they remembered the obligation they took at the altar, or else they probably never properly understood what they were saying. For let it never be forgotten in our country as well as in our lodges, the ultimate power resides in the combined wills of the people. Masonry could never condone dictatorship.

How well Washington illustrates the fact that the setting sun of a well-spent life gilds its parting moments with the glory of a beautiful sunset. Monuments have been erected to his memory, whose towering spires cleave the heavens. Weak men such as I may honor and revere his name. States and towns may be named in his honor, but after all this Government stands as the chief reminder that this great man of Masonry lived and wrought in the times when this great country of ours had its beginnings, and that, as a man, a Mason, a lawgiver, and finally as a very great Christian gentleman, we have very reason to name him in a very real sense: The Father of his Country.

OUTLAWING THE GERRYMANDER

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, there is a time-worn but not time-honored custom indulged in by frustrated political bosses which ought to be legislated against for the good of our country.

I speak of the notorious practice of gerrymandering, the foul method of eliminating incumbent officeholders who become too solid in the people's regard to be defeated by the politicians.

This is their only recourse, after giant public smear campaigns, carried on for years without avail, and expenditures of more than a million dollars, as in my own case, have all failed.

In desperation they resort to the gerrymander and throw loyal constituents out of a Congressman's district simply by a change of geography.

Every honest public officer who has been able to survive their barbs and innuendoes, and has remained strong enough with his voters to win in spite of their attempts to turn people against him, is vitally affected by a gerrymander. Actually, no Member of Congress is entirely safe, because he can be victimized overnight by the same bloodthirsty gang he thought were his friends.

In the midst of national calamity, when the Nation's eyes are focused upon our very survival against outside, evil forces, the time is ripe for political opportunists, like small boys playing with dynamite, to take care of Congressmen they hate through the dastardly use of gerrymander.

It behooves each Member of this House, therefore, regardless of how safe he may consider himself or how fairhaired he may pose at the moment, to be on guard. He may wake up some fine morning to find that his State legislature has thrown him into a new constituency, much of which is new and strange territory to him.

Such policies are detrimental to the very purposes for which this Congress was founded.

The gerrymander places the average officeholder in a district in which time prohibits his campaigning for reelection. He is therefore dependent upon those who control the political machinery to such an extent that a handful of men can prevent him from running for office in the traditional American way.

The people are thereby deprived of a champion, knocked out of the lists by cowardly duplicity, before he is given the chance of a fair fight.

The people never have the opportunity to know the men who aspire to represent them because things are all decided for them before the new constituency is made public.

For these reasons, and to insure our country of a direct election system which makes American Government worth fighting for, I am introducing the Hall antigerrymander bill and hope for its early consideration.

This is the year the entire country must be reapportioned. It is only sensible to accompany the measures already presented which will change the number of Representatives from the several States, to the advantage of some and detriment of others, with a bill such as mine, laying down a fair policy of defining congressional districts.

Let us destroy, once and for all, the disgraceful practice of gerrymandering, so that free Americans will be certain of the chance to select the men they wish in a free manner, unhampered by dirty politics or by vengeful political bosses.

The Hall antigerrymander bill reads as follows:

A bill to strengthen national defense by outlawing the gerrymander and saving representative government

Whereas through our history ruthless political rings have succeeded in eliminating representatives of the people whom they could not defeat at the polls by gerrymandering them out of office; and

Whereas it is to the advantage of political cliques and detrimental to the people to radically change or modify political subdivisions of any State, county, or town; and

Whereas the practice of gerrymandering which violates the geography of a political subdivision and deliberately seeks to place incumbent officeholders in constituencies strange and hostile to them for the sole purpose of defeating them for reelection; and

Whereas no political subdivision should be composed of anything but the nearest possible compactness in geographical shape for efficiency and ease in bringing about direct representation; and

Whereas political opportunism which thrives on the gerrymander system must be submerged in the interests of national defense: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc.—

1. It shall be unlawful to design any congressional district in any State in any other geographical form than a rectangle or as nearly thereto as possible.

2. Elongated geographical shapes composing counties and other subdivisions formed to create congressional districts shall be prohibited.

3. Upon the passage of this bill the notorious practice of gerrymandering shall be forever null and void and those responsible for its continuance shall be liable to individual fines up to $100,000.

EASING THE TAX BURDEN

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of a bill—H. R. 2618—to ease the burden of income taxes on persons of limited means. Mr. Speaker, that is a wonderful and fine objective. The bill proposes to arrive at that objective by raising the exemptions on personal income taxes from $600 to $1,000 for a single person, to $2,500 for married persons, with an added exemption of $1,000 for each child.

Mr. Speaker, this bill should read, "A bill to remove from the tax rolls 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 present taxpayers, and to reduce the tax take of the Treasury some $7,000,000,000 at least." Our budget is now unbalanced to the tune of $16,000,000,000, and if this bill were passed it would unbalance it still more to $23,000,000,000.

GREATER RECOGNITION OF AGRICULTURE IN DEFENSE SET-UP

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, just when does the administration intend to give agriculture its rightful place in the national defense set-up?

Agriculture is the Nation's basic industry. Our farmers are being called upon to produce food not only for our own Nation but for other large segments of the world's population. If they are to produce the food that is needed during this emergency, they will have to have the needed manpower, farm machinery and repairs, fertilizer, and other essential items.

To date the needs of the American farmer in the food production program have largely been relegated to the background. Agriculture is not yet recognized as being a vital part of the defense program.

Agriculture, as well as labor and business, is demanding its rightful place in the defense effort. I call upon the administration to immediately give a farm representative a top place in the Economic Defense Agency. Such representation would make the farmers of the country really feel they were a vital part of the Nation's defense effort. Given the tools, the supplies, and the manpower, you can depend on the American farmer to do the job.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. VURSELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

EVIDENCE THAT INDIA CAN PAY FOR NEEDED GRAIN

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of helping the people of India to get the grain they need to avert starvation. The President urges that no political strings be attached to it. With this I agree. Under the circumstances it is our duty to make this food available.

The question arises, however, should it be a virtual gift or should we ascertain whether India is in a position to pay for this grain? If she is not, then considerations of humanity should prevail.

But I find substantial evidence that India is in a position to pay without impairing its dollar reserve or disrupting its economy.

Three ways that India can pay for this grain are:

First. By sale to us of thorium and uranium, or agreements with regard thereto.

Second. Payment in blocked British sterling in India's account in London.

Third. Payment from the vast wealth hoarded by India's princes.

This would mean a saving of one hundred and ninety millions to the American people with no injury to the people of India.

There is also danger that we may antagonize friendly Pakistan if we pass this bill as it stands.

Now as to the thorium and uranium, the raw materials for atomic energy. It is true that part of India's people must have grain to live. But I submit that the United States has to maintain its lead in stockpiling atomic materials in order for our entire country and the free world, including India, to survive. I understand the Atomic Energy Commission has ascertained that India is the world's greatest source of the fissionable metal thorium. The beach sands of Travancore used to be exported to this country for the extraction of thorium and other minerals called rare earths.

But since 1946 India has had an embargo on the exportation of thorium. They have been extracting the rare earths, but stockpiling the thorium ore, although the Atomic Energy Commission says that the United States is very anxious to increase its stockpile of thorium. A small percentage of uranium is also in this ore.

Since India is not deriving any revenue from this thorium, but is merely sitting on it, is there any good reason why they should not trade us thorium for grain? Since thorium is one of the two elements from which atomic weapons can be made, it is obvious that the strategic importance of such an arrangement would even outweigh the economic side of it.

During the last war this country engaged in what was called preclusive buying in neutral countries in order to deny strategic materials to the enemy. Would it not be very reassuring if in return for the 2,000,000 tons of grain that we are going to furnish at India's behest, this vital stockpile of thorium were made available to the United States, and thus unavailable for purchase or seizure by Soviet Russia or Soviet China?

In addition to this great thorium supply, India is reported to have found uranium ore in two different localities during the past 6 months. The Indian geologists have been reported in the press as saying that these two uranium discoveries are of large extent and of workable quality. The Atomic Energy Commission does not know how important these uranium strikes may be. I suggest that it would be a very handsome thing on the part of India if she would offer this country a long-term agreement to explore, develop, and buy this uranium, if it turns out to be a significant source of supply.

In favoring the supplying of grain to India, I am thinking of the best interests of the Indian people. And in suggesting that there should be a simultaneous offer by India to supply us with atomic materials, I am thinking of the best interests of the American people, which, after all, is the main thing that our constituents elected us to do.

My inquiries also indicate that India could pay, if we asked her to, in blocked British pounds. The so-called blocked sterling balance that India has in London is the result of the very large profits that India earned during the war by furnishing Great Britain materials and services. At the end of the war India had a balance of £1,200,000,000 in blocked sterling. At the present time she still holds £619,000,000 or some $1,700,000,000, according to the British Information Service. About a third of this is obligated to the Colombo plan under which it will be used during the next 6 years for building up India's production.

This leaves more than a billion dollars' worth of blocked sterling, at current exchange rates, part of which could be used to pay the United States for this grain. The State Department, I understand, feels that there is no question but that we could make good use of blocked sterling in the future. It might be that we could not use it immediately for fear of upsetting the British economy, but it could be used eventually, by agreement with Britain, for the construction of air bases in sterling-area nations, and in many other ways. Please note that this would save the United States $190,000,000 in future expenditures which otherwise would have to be appropriated by the Congress, and eventually paid by every American taxpayer. At the same time it would not cost India any of its dollar exchange, and it would not cost India any sterling that under present arrangements can be used in the next 6 years.

The third way in which India could pay for this 2,000,000 tons of grain is by borrowing or taxing the amount of money required away from its fabulously wealthy citizens, the Indian princes. There are many of these princes, a number of them of great wealth. I have had time to check on only one of them, the Nizam of Hyberabad, reputed to be the richest man in the world. According to the 1948 edition of Current Biography, this miser has a personal fortune of $2,000,000,000 made up of a half billion dollars' worth of gold and silver bullion, and one and a half billion dollars' worth of jewels.

Please understand that this hoard is not in any way productive. This greatest miser of all time keeps it in his palace where he can gloat over it daily. Inasmuch as this fortune was wrung from the hides of the coolies of Hyderabad over a long period of years, would it not be fitting that a small portion of it be returned to these poor people now in their time of need? If any of my constituents in Wisconsin feel that they are better able to afford having their taxes raised than the Nizam of Hyderabad I shall be surprised to hear it. Again let me point out that payment for the grain by this means would not cost India any dollar exchange that she currently is earning.

Naturally men of such wealth as these Indian princes have many friends at court both inside and outside of India, and it might take some effort on the part of the Indian Government to follow the suggestion made here. I should not be surprised if the thought of shaking down these miserly royalties might go against the grain of the protocol-conscious diplomats in our State Department who recommended to the President that our only course was to present this $190,000,000 worth of grain to India free and clear. They have no stomach for any kind of rude bargaining in the interests of the United States.

There has been considerable comment in recent days both in the press and radio and in a speech in the House by the gentleman from Ohio, Congressman HAYS, indicating that India has refused to buy the surplus grain available in next-door Pakistan because India has been waging an economic war against Pakistan. I do not pretend to know the full story on this, but I have taken the trouble to ascertain from the Pakistan Minister that Pakistan does expect to have available for export this year a half million tons of rice and wheat above its own requirements. He also said that India has made no effort to buy this grain, though it has used up much of its dollar exchange buying grain in Canada and this country, which grain then must be shipped half way around the world with the shipping charges adding 25 percent to the original cost. It seems to me this phase of the matter should be very thoroughly examined because it would be certain to antagonize friendly Pakistan if we should enter into an arrangement that would mean we were, however unknowingly, supporting an economic blockade of Pakistan by India.

Offending Pakistan might also offend the other Moslem nations of the Middle East. Whoever pays for the Pakistan grain, the importation of this half million tons surplus by India would save one-quarter of the amount of grain being asked of this country, not to mention the saving to India in shipping charges.

To sum up, I want the people of India to receive the grain they need. I also want the people of the United States to know that their Government has finally reached the point where it will abandon the Hopkins-Wallace-Acheson principle of free milk and honey for every foreign country, preferably socialistic ones. The people want ther representatives to spend less money on nondefense items and hand-outs. I submit this matter of asking India to pay for our grain in a way that she can afford to is an excellent place to start doing what the people are demanding.

I also submit that the State Department in its recommendation to President Truman and the President in his recommendation to Congress have deliberately omitted any mention of India's ability to pay for this grain. We, the representatives of the American people, are supposed to take the word of this spendthrift executive branch that this colossal sum of $190,000,000 must be handed to India as a present. One hundred and ninety million dollars may not sound like so much these days; but just as an example to the American people of how much of their substance they are being asked to give away without any real investigation, I find that the combined cost of the great battleship Wisconsin and the Grand Coulee Dam, the world's largest—both of these great American assets—were bought for this amount of money we are asked to hand blithely over to India—no strings attached.

No information has been presented to Congress by the administration as to whether or not India is in a position to pay without damage to its economy. Our bounty is not so great that we can part with our substance to those who are in a position to pay, particularly when there well may be others with real, stark need.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not claim to be, and definitely am not, an expert on military matters, nor on foreign policy. I merely hope, however, that I have just a little bit of horse sense. I heard a fellow say recently that horse sense is that sense that a horse has that keeps him from betting on man. Well, maybe he had something there. I am sure that none of us would feel justified in bragging on mankind, just now, but I am sure that all of you join me in hoping and praying that the whole world may become a better and a safer place in which to live. As for me, I generally keep the optimistic attitude and somehow I believe the world will get better instead of worse. Of course I do not know and neither does anyone else. I do know this one thing, however, that like you, I love this, my country, with all my heart. I stand ready at all times to give my political or my physical life for it. I offered my physical life for my country on several battle fields in World War I and if it will ever be worth anything at all in any future war, regardless of who brings it about, I offer it gladly again for my country.

> Breathes there a man with > Soul so dead
> Who never to himself hath said,
> This is my own, my native land.

Yes, I shall try to use just a little bit of horse sense in discussing this most important matter of war and peace. I may fail entirely to use any horse sense, or any kind of sense whatsoever, but I will at least try. Some of the ideas I shall suggest will be my own and some will be those of others that I have picked up here and there largely through reading and studying for the past 30 years. I shall present these ideas to you for your consideration. You, of course, will do what you please with them—I just want you to think with me about them and I am sure your thinking will be as good as mine and very probably much better.

My general thought is that by following the policy of sending a large land army to Europe and Asia, we will be spreading ourselves out all over the world and by this process, which will also entail almost unbearable financial obligations, we will so weaken ourselves as to endanger our very existence.

AGREES GENERALLY WITH HOOVER AND TAFT

In the beginning, I might say that I agree in substance with former President Hoover and Senator ROBERT TAFT, of Ohio, in their recent statements relative to foreign policy. Mr. Hoover has said, in substance, that he thinks we should build up an impregnable defense here in the Western Hemisphere; that we should strengthen our naval and air forces as our primary defense. I agree fully in this philosophy. He thinks we should not commit large land armies to Europe and so does Senator TAFT, and I certainly agree with them. On January 5, 1951, in a major address on foreign policy, according to the press, Senator TAFT, among other things, said:

> We have no business going over there—
> Meaning Europe—
> and trying to prod them into a great military program which, in my opinion, is almost certain to produce war. I doubt very much that the Russians contemplate any military conquest of the world. I do not myself see any conclusive evidence that they expect to start a war with the United States, yet it seems to me most unwise to admit that war is inevitable until it has occurred and it seems to me today that our policy is based too much on that premise.

I might add that, in my judgment, the Russian leadership has never contemplated a military conquest of the world, nor do they now do so. It is as plain as the nose on your face to me that their program is to take over the world by infiltration and fanatical propaganda and teachings. In other words, it is evident from all signs I have been able to read that it is their fanatical belief that capitalism will some day die of its own weight because of the alleged weakness existing in such a form of government. In other words, they believe that as soon as we have another big depression, our people will accept communism as a matter of natural consequence. They, in their fanatical way, believe that communism will finally be accepted, not by force of armies, but by force of necessity.

We, therefore, in my judgment, are missing the boat entirely and are building up a great military machine and spreading it out all over the world and doing violence to our domestic economy on the theory that Russia intends to march with its armies, when as a matter of fact, Russia has no such intention. If I am right in this, they, the Russians, are outsmarting us in that particular respect and are weakening us. I believe that we should reexamine our foreign policy in line with this thought.

We judge everything by comparison. We say that a chair is small in comparison with a large room it is in. But we say that the same chair is large in comparison to the small child who is seated in it. We say a man is good when we do not mean that he is a perfect man but we only mean that he is good in comparison to a man who is bad, and vice versa. We in the democratic countries know that communism is bad in comparison, of course, to democracy; in other words, to our way of life. The Russians, however, have no way to compare it with democracy. They have never experienced democracy and the only thing they can compare it with is czarism, and as bad as communism is, it probably is not as bad for the Russian people as czarism was. My understanding, from reading history is that the Czarist government was just about the most tyrannical, corrupt, and oppressive the world has ever known. That is why communism was accepted in Russia. Under czarism, the Russians had had neither personal liberties nor economic welfare, among the masses of their people. In other words, the average person was continually hungry and craving even the barest necessities of life. Under communism, the Russian people still do not have personal liberties, as we have, but they do have apparently more food to eat and more clothes to wear. Communism will never be accepted, I mean generally, of course, in this country or any other country that has really experienced democracy.

PRESENT POLICY IS TOWARD WAR

With our present policy we are fast drifting toward world war III, in my judgment. Such a war is not inevitable and if we profit by past experience, I think it may be avoided. But we are following generally the same pattern that we followed before both World War I and World War II. We could have stayed out of World War I and World War II had we really tried. The thing that got us into those wars was not appeasement—we have never been appeasers, nor will we ever be—nor was it isolationism—we have never been isolationists—those are merely scare words, expressions of derision built up by the propagandists; but the thing that got us into those wars was our own intervention, in other words, taking sides in wars that were going on.

We violated the admonition given to us by George Washington to beware of foreign entangling alliances and became all tangled up in the intrigues, secret dealings, selfishnesses, jealousies, and hatreds of the European and Asiatic countries and, of course, when we took sides and began actively and materially to assist one side and violently oppose the other, we, of course, became involved in war; and as long as we do that, we shall continue to become involved in war. Of course, our motive and intention was good, there can be no question about that, but the question is: Did we profit and did the world profit by our getting into those two wars? Are we not, and is the world not, worse off than if we had not become so involved? If we had stayed out of those wars, they would have been only European and/or Asiatic wars, at the most, and would not have become world wars. Of course, we had to fight, and we properly did so, after Pearl Harbor, but would there have been a Pearl Harbor if we had followed a different course? I do not think so. Switzerland stayed out of both wars and she was right next door to them. Sweden stayed out of both wars and she was right next door. Ireland stayed out of World War II although great pressure was brought to bring the Emerald Isle into the great conflict. Argentina in the Western Hemisphere stayed out of World War I. I know that a great many people will say, "Yes, it is true that these nations did stay out but they are small nations." Instead of this being an argument to disprove my point, it is an argument in favor of it. A small nation has much less chance to stay out of a world conflict than a large nation does. Neither side will hesitate very much in trying to force a small nation into its orbit for its own selfish interests, but will hesitate long before committing any action of violence or aggression against a large nation which, if aroused in opposition, might turn the balance of the scales against that side.

No, the real truth of the matter is we got into both wars because of the fact that we definitely involved ourselves by our words and by our actions. The reason we became involved, and I shall elaborate on it later, is that our people hated and feared one side of the antagonists so violently that soon neutrality was thrown to the wind and a desire to become engaged was engendered. This hatred and fear was planted in the hearts and minds of the people by continuous, from day to day, propaganda. The propagandists, no doubt, meant well, at least some of them did, but their views were distorted by unreasonable fear and hate, and truth was either crushed to earth or at least seriously wounded and reason fled and hysteria reigned supreme.

PROPAGANDA CAUSES FEAR AND HATE

The reason we become so violent in our dislikes toward certain countries during war, or during a period of confusion and near-war stage, is not because our people are inherently warlike, but because we become unduly alarmed and irrationally afraid. We become, in fact, hysterical. I think this is true of any and all people who are subjected to continuous scare stories. We have heard them now for years—not one but many, practically every day. You can scarcely read any newspaper or tune in on any radio any time without hearing them. No wonder the people are engulfed with fear until the Nation is no longer completely normal. The people hate and fear so much that one whose head is cool and whose heart is true is either afraid to speak out in words of sanity, or if he does, is not heeded and is often stoned or scorned. We hate and fear just whatever the newspapers and the radio want us to hate and fear. They turn public opinion on and off just like you would turn water on and off at a hydrant with a water faucet. May I give you a concrete example in my own life. When I was a kid 18 years old, a senior in high school, I enlisted in World War I. I thought the Germans were cutting arms off Belgium children and pitching them up in the air and catching them on their bayonets; that they were crucifying Canadian soldiers and taking dead English soldiers and boiling their bodies and making soap. I believed this because the newspapers, the leading ones in our country, almost daily told of such atrocities, on the part of the Germans, or similar ones. Of course, after I got over there I found those stories were utterly untrue. A great many of the people actually thought that the Kaiser was probably the anti-Christ here on earth, that he was the devil incarnate. Of course, years later, after the passions of war had cooled down and had practically died, he was referred to as a great Christian gentleman. Right now we are talking about rearming the Germans and Japanese, as allies and friends, who only a short while ago were so barbarious and beastly as to be unspeakably bad.

I suppose that a great many of you who are hearing me today will recall that during World War II there was a strong movement here in our Capital City on the part of many very fine people to cut down the cherry trees in the city because originally they had come from Japan. Now, anyone who would advocate the cutting down of those trees would be laughed at or, if he attempted to do so, would be put in jail. The real change is in our own minds. We are not now listening every day to horror stories hurled against the Germans and the Japs. We even call them Japanese now and we never refer to the Germans as Huns as we once did. I want it distinctly understood that I am certain that the Kaiser and Hitler and the Japanese leaders committed many diabolical acts of violence by their policies and I certainly hold no brief for any of them but the point I am making is that in their day and time they were so violently hated and feared that our people were convinced that unless we should go to war against them, they would overrun the world. No doubt they would have liked to have taken over the world, each of them, but looking at the matter in retrospect, we now know that it would have been utterly impossible for them to have done so. It is exactly the same today. It is utterly impossible for Russia, or for any nation for that matter, to take over the world by military might, ourselves included. If they should undertake such a thing, they will meet with disastrous results. If we should attempt such a thing, although with a good purpose in mind, we shall meet with the same disastrous results. The newspapers and radio unwittingly, of course, have by continuous scare stories built Russia up as a sort of super state as far as strength is concerned. Russia does not in reality have such strength. In one breath they say that Russia is governed by a bad and weak political philosophy and in the next breath, they say that unless we send armies out all over the world Russia will take over the world; it just does not make sense to me.

THE ANSWER

The only answer that I can see to bring about a real change in our policy is, first, a return to the teachings of Christ, which, if we actually follow, will rid us of so much hate and fear that is now in our minds and hearts and which weakens us by keeping us in a state of hysteria; and, second, establishing a practical status of building an absolutely impregnable line of military defense for ourselves, including our neighbors in the Western Hemisphere. In other words, if we maintain a strong Army, Navy, and Air Force, and especially a strong Air and Navy Force, and get rid of some of our fear and hatred, and thus rid of some of our false thinking, in my judgment, neither Russia nor any nation, nor group of nations, will dare start a war with us, but if they should we will surely win. Thus, I think we might by such policy definitely guarantee the peace of the world. If the world remains at peace for a reasonable period of time democracy will whip the socks off of communism in a nonwar fight, because of the inherent spiritual strength that there is in democracy, as opposed to communism. Communism is inherently a weak philosophy of government for two reasons:

First, no political philosophy can be permanently strong in this world that does not form a partnership with Almighty God. In other words, communism has a partnership with materialism and leaves God out of the picture; whereas democracy realizes that God must be taken into account at all times; and, second, communism is inherently weak for the reason that the mind of man cries out for, and will eventually demand, recognition of individual liberties and justice, and, therefore, will demand that the Government guarantee these inalienable rights; whereas communism teaches and practices totalitarianism, which is, in fact, a worship of the strength of the state, and which results in the loss of human freedoms. Therefore, a world at peace, since every normal individual in the world will continue to strive for democracy will gradually dispose of, and relegate to oblivion, communism. However, if we should become involved in a world war, even our own Nation would at least temporarily have to largely abandon its democratic processes in order to carry on an effective military program, and if we should abandon them, that fact, together with the destructive forces that would be unloosed on the world, could very easily result in a destruction of all democratic processes for at least years to come.

DO EUROPEAN NATIONS WANT OUR MILITARY HELP?

Can any of us truthfully say that we are convinced that the European nations have been demanding or even urging us to furnish them with arms or send large armies over there now or in the near future? Is it not true that we are the prime movers in insisting that they be rearmed? May it not be true that the nations that are much closer to Russia than we are and, therefore, are in a better position to know what the true state of affairs are, are less fearful of Russia, especially from a military standpoint, than we are? In other words, if there are signs that Russia intends to move militarily against Europe, why is it that the European nations do not know it or cannot sense it? No; the European nations either do not fear Russia from a military standpoint or else they do not have the will to resist. In either case, it will be most unwise, very dangerous, and can well be disastrous for us to try to carry out such a policy of forcing upon the European people what they apparently do not want. By urging the European nations to arm, we are without a doubt scaring the Russians. Even though we are violently opposed to their communistic philosophy of life—and no one could possibly be more opposed to it than I—we must recognize the fact that they are human beings and, being such, they are subject to being scared the same as we are, and if we start arming their neighbors to the teeth for the very purpose of encompassing them round about, even though our moves are actually intended to be defense moves, will they not be interpreted by the Russians as offensive moves on our part?

In other words, suppose Russia were obtaining bases and sending large armies of their own to Mexico and other countries on the Western Hemisphere. Would we believe them if they should say that they were doing that merely as a matter of defense against us? We all know that we would not believe any such strategy on their part; then why should we expect them to believe us? The Russians, who experienced loss of lives running into the millions in the recent war with Germany, evidently fear for their lives the same as we do. Practically every human being, whether good or bad, wants to live. Ordinarily, the Russian leaders, in my judgment, could not force the Russian people to engage in military aggression unless they could convince the people that some particular enemy was getting ready to attack them. In other words, by our very own actions of arming Russia's neighbors, if the Russian leaders actually do want to start a military war, we are playing right into their hands in solidifying the Russian people, in their favor.

If, as I have suggested, Russia should be moving armies to the Western Hemisphere, we know that it would not make any difference to us what party might be in power, whether our Government at that particular time was popular or unpopular with the people, but every true American, and that would include most all of our people, would forget all differences and grievances; all criticism would cease, and practically every man, woman, and child would turn his or her attention to one thing alone, and that would be loyalty to his country and a concerted effort to prepare for resistance. Yes; and even for attack. We would not want to see so powerful a military force of a potential enemy move in so close to us, and we no doubt would attack, and if we did, our whole Nation would be united as never before.

Then why will we expect them not to do so? If they, the Russians, really intend to try to overrun the world by military force, why have they not started their armies moving by now? There is not the slightest question but what the Russian leaders would like to communize, sovietize the world, but there is no evidence, in my judgment, that even they are crazy enough to believe that they can do so by military force.

IS OUR POLICY FOR PEACE?

It is my sincere opinion that at least most all of those who subscribe to the present program truly believe that it is in the interest of the people, but the important question for us to ask is not what they actually believe but what the actual realities are. If the program of our arming and sending large land armies to Europe is actually for peace, of course, it should be supported by everyone, and I most certainly would support it, if I so believed, but since I do not believe it is for peace, nor for the good of our own country, I cannot conscientiously subscribe to it.

At this time we are engaged in an actual war in Korea, and as a citizen and as a Member of Congress, I shall do everything within my power to provide for and support our heroic servicemen who are there, and will continue to hope and pray that the best results possible may be obtained. I hope the war may not spread in Asia and feel that we should do all within our power to prevent its doing so. I fear that a general conflagration there might prove disastrous to us. In this connection I call your attention to an article appearing on the front page of the Washington Post just a few days ago, February 15. The article is as follows:

TUCSON, ARIZ., February 14.—(AP)—William O. Douglas, Justice of the United States Supreme Court, said today, "If we continue our present foreign policy, especially in Asia, if we continue in our present direction, we are doomed to disaster."

Justice Douglas was speaking to a local civic club gathering. He said the Asiatic world is in revolution similar to that which came to France and America. The Justice added, "I gathered my information, not in the capitals of the Asiatic countries, but in talking to farmers and goat herders in the back areas.

"The world is different than we in America have thought. The plain fact is that the world is in a revolution that cannot be bought off with dollars. There are rumblings in every village from the Mediterranean to the Pacific.

"We think of that force as communism but it is not. The Communists only exploit the situation."

Why do we think we can solve the problems of foreign nations by sending our armies out over the face of the world? How many of us here in Congress know anything to speak of, about how to solve the problems of these foreign governments? Do you not believe that we pretty well have our hands full in trying to solve the many problems of our own Government, our own people, without taking over the problems of the whole world?

CONCLUSION

May I say in conclusion that I do not contend that the newspapers, radio, and other instrumentalities for informing the public, that ordinarily give us so much good and accurate information, are inherently to blame for the fear that grips our Nation, for all down through the ages, long before newspapers and radio came into being, nations have hated and feared other nations and those hatreds and fears have driven them to unnecessary wars. In the olden days those hatreds and fears were passed from mouth to ear. The reason I have said what I did about these absolutely necessary institutions of public information is that they are to adults, in a sense, what school books are to children. They keep the adult population educated on current news and events. Their power is very great, indeed, in these modern times. It seems to me to be a definite human trait for one to believe the things he sees in print, especially, or hears over the radio, far more readily than what he hears in ordinary conversation. They are run by human beings who are just like the rest of us. They have their hates and human weaknesses; become scared and act unwisely, yet, ordinarily, with the best of intentions. They are subject to error, also, and when you add it all up you will find, I believe, on every occasion when serious conflict occurs in our international relationships and especially when we are dealing with countries whose ideologies we abhor, and still more especially as tension of near-war status approaches, more and more irrational information is furnished until there is an avalanche of it and it engulfs us and we become panicky and, of course, act irrationally.

Then why should I, believing as I do that we have gone so far with an unwise and dangerous foreign policy and been subjected to so much propaganda, still have some degree of optimism? I will tell you why. Deep down in my heart I believe that a true Christian conviction is growing in the hearts and minds of our people. That they are beginning to rely more and more on spiritual values; that they are praying more than they ever have, and that if this tendency continues we will begin to think more clearly and be less affected by erroneous information and thus will lose some of our hate and much of our fear, and then we will begin to act more normally. We will realize that we do not have reason to fear Russia, so much as we have in the past. We will, of course, recognize the fact that we must be practical and prepare ourselves militarily, for no one absolutely knows what the Russians are going to do and we must take no chance, but be fully prepared so that neither Russia nor any other nation will dare attack us or, if they do, that they will meet an inglorious defeat. We will understand that all-out war is to be avoided, if at all possible, and do sensible things to avoid it, as it does not cure the evils in the world, and thus we will avoid it. My hope is that the people generally will begin to urge such a policy as I have suggested upon our leadership, and if they do, in my judgment such policy will be adopted and our grand and glorious Nation will become the undisputed leader for peace upon this earth.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McMULLEN. If in your opinion you do not believe Russia will resort to the military force of war, why do you feel it is necessary that our Government form an impregnable defense through air and sea power?

Mr. MORRIS. Because we must not take any chances. No one knows what they are going to do, and we must not take any chances. We are living in a dangerous world, and we cannot afford to take any chances. No one knows what they are going to do, of course.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did we not have air and sea power in Korea?

Mr. MORRIS. Of course we had that power there; yes, sir.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. PRIEST. The gentleman indicated he was very strongly opposed to sending large land forces to Europe. Does he not believe that the statement which General Marshall made before the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to the effect that only four new divisions would be needed in addition to the two that are there pretty well removes from the so-called great debate the question of large ground forces in Europe?

Mr. MORRIS. No, sir; it does not remove that question at all from the problem. In my judgment, if they get four, they will begin to ask for eight, and so on, and the number will just be increased and increased, and, like a snowball rolling along, it will gather weight and size and strength, and there we will go into another war. That is my judgment. I am subject to error, of course. I may be entirely wrong, but that is my judgment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Tennessee asked about four divisions in addition to the two divisions, making six. Do you think for a moment that if we send six divisions over there and get into any trouble that we would not have to send all that may be needed?

Mr. PRIEST. Of course, I think if it came to a question of an invasion of Western Europe by Soviet Russia, certainly we will send as many divisions as needed, but I think that would involve a declaration of war, all-out war, and the Congress would authorize whatever is necessary to win such a war. I simply asked that question in order to get that into the RECORD. I do believe, in view of the statement made by General Marshall that we need only four new divisions, making six with the two already there, which would be 10 percent of the army contemplated to implement the North Atlantic Treaty organization under General Eisenhower, that that will be a great deterrent to a Russian invasion of Western Europe. Certainly it would not be a force of sufficient strength to indicate that we—I mean by that the western nations——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT). The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] has a special order following.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma may proceed for five additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST]. No doubt General Marshall, for whom I have the greatest respect, spoke in good faith. There is no question about that. But we recall that before World War II they said, "You just send us the supplies. We do not want men. You just send supplies and material and we will take care of them." But we know where our men went, and many of them were killed on foreign battlefields. They said that, of course, but it does not work out that way.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I want to compliment the gentleman from Oklahoma for his very fine contribution to this debate that is going on all over the country. Our people are alarmed as a result of certain war hysteria, perhaps. I agree with what the gentleman has said about the possibility of war. I would like to refer to a statement made by Mr. Eugene Lyons, who is perhaps one of the outstanding authorities on communism in this country, having lived over there for a number of years. He said:

> Soviet Russia since war's end has had the physical capacity to overrun all of Europe but has not done so. She might have swallowed up Finland, smashed the Berlin air lift, reinforced Greek Communist guerrillas to the point of victory, taken Iran in a week; but most significantly, she could have overwhelmed Tito's Yugoslavia, the most serious threat to her totalitarian hegemony. She did none of these things for the plain reason that they packed the possibility of a real war to a finish.

In addition to that, the gentleman is supported by a statement made by General Bradley a short time ago, in which he expressed his opinion that there was no immediate danger of war.

Last week I had occasion to write to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, now president of the University of Pennsylvania, Mr. Harold Stassen. He had just completed a trip abroad. I asked him specifically as to the possibility, in view of his trip, of whether another war would come this spring or summer. He said:

> As to your question about the possibility of Russia's army moving this spring or summer, one can never tell, but I do not believe they will.

It seems to me that is powerful evidence contrary to the present tendency to whip up war hysteria.

Mr. MORRIS. I thank the gentleman very much for his observation.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of course the gentleman knows what he is letting himself in for.

Mr. MORRIS. Oh, yes. I am not unmindful of that, of course.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You were talking something about these other nations going into a third world war. Let me read you what Churchill said right after World War I. This is what he said:

> America's entrance into the war was disastrous, not only for your country but for the Allies as well, because if you had stayed home and minded your own business we would have made peace with the central powers in the spring of 1917.
> Then there would have been no collapse in Russia followed by communism, no breakdown in Italy, followed by fascism; and nazism would not at the present time be any threat in Germany.

He also said this; he repeated the other statement:

> If America had stayed out of the war and minded her own business all these "isms" would not today be sweeping the continent of Europe and breaking down all parliamentary government.

That is what we got out of World War I and World War II. What will we get out of this one?

Mr. MORRIS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman said he was in the First World War. This is a thing that we have got to watch both as civilians and as Congressmen, that is that war is a game on the part of military men. During the First World War—and this is documented evidence—when the French were short of war materials they would call over across the line and it would be shipped over by the trainload. When the Germans were short of certain materials they would in turn call upon the French for material and get it. That kept the war going. That is documented. I say that is a side of this issue that we want to watch; there are people who want to get us into war just to play the war game.

Mr. MORRIS. I thank the gentleman from New York for his contribution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

CHARLES WILSON AND MOBILIZATION

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, our Government should have learned a valuable lesson from its experience in mobilizing manpower and industry during World War I and World War II. After the Korean trouble started last June, the Eighty-first Congress, after much delay, passed the Defense Production Act. A minority in Congress protested at that time that this legislation was a skimmed-milk effort to control either food prices or rents, the two necessities which have contributed more than anything else to skyrocket the cost of living.

President Truman signed the Defense Production Act reluctantly because it was the only legislation he could get from the Congress before adjournment. The Congress is not without responsibility for the present unfortunate upheaval in our economy because it listened to the pressure lobbies when the Defense Production Act was passed last fall. Under the Defense Production Act, it is impossible to adequately control food prices and rents.

The other reason for the unfortunate turmoil developing in our mobilization program is the short-sighted attitude of Mobilization Chief Charles E. Wilson in excluding representatives of labor from the inner sanctums which have set up the present ineffective price-control program.

LABOR IGNORED

In World War II, America performed a production miracle because labor's representatives sat side by side with industry and business in an effort to solve equitable price-control and wage problems. Up to this time, under Mr. Charles Wilson, our mobilization program has been formulated on a policy of by and for big business. Labor has not only been denied a seat in mobilization councils, but its recommendations have been wholly disregarded. The present wage-stabilization policy hampers collective bargaining and totally disregards adequate wage adjustments to offset in any degree whatsoever the unreasonably high cost of living. In World War II labor's representatives not only participated in our war-economy program but their recommendations for an equitable bearing of the war burden was adopted. This policy brought about remarkable harmony between management and labor and resulted in the miraculous American production which Mr. Stalin himself said was the No. 1 contribution to our victory.

Since last June industrial and big-business management has been engaged in an unfortunate race for big profits and have totally ignored the millions of wage earners who are trying to survive on a June 1950 pay check. The most unfortunate victims in this profiteering scramble are the millions of office workers, unorganized wage earners, school teachers, old folks on pensions, persons on retirement, and so forth.

On the shoulders of Charles E. Wilson, who has been delegated the master minding of our war economy, rests a responsibility which is greater than the task confronting our military leaders. If our production becomes hampered and delayed by industrial unrest, strikes, and work stoppages, it will indirectly cost untold lives and hardships at the front and complicate our war problems immeasurably.

STRIKES, RAILROAD, ETC.

The recent railway tie-up, the textile strike, and other work stoppages over the country are but a beginning of what is sure to follow unless the cost of living is rolled back and profiteering curtailed so that millions in America can live within their monthly income. During the recent unfortunate railway tie-up, I received numerous letters and also long-distance telephone calls from wives of railway workers in my district, protesting against the unreasonable attitude of railway management in refusing to grant a reasonable increase so that their families could adequately live under the present inflationary prices.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that certain newspapers and radio commentators and some Members of Congress impugned a lack of patriotism and disloyalty on the part of railway workers during that crisis. Most of these workers had sons in our Armed Forces and some fighting in Korea. Most of the men themselves served in either World War I or World War II. Most of the propaganda regarding the railway wage controversy would infer that railway management was an innocent victim. This propaganda failed to mention that during the last year, the Pennsylvania Railroad, after all taxes were paid, had a 1950 profit of $38,000,000 compared with $12,000,000 the year before; the Santa Fe Railroad's profit increased from $55,000,000 to $81,000,000; Union Pacific Railroad, from $21,000,000 to $44,000,000; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, from $27,000,000 to $34,000,000; New York Central, from $9,700,000 to $18,300,000, and so forth. These unreasonable profits are not necessarily confined to railroad corporations, but apply to most other industries in relative proportions. For instance, after taxes, United States Steel jumped from $165,000,000 in 1949 to $215,000,000 in 1950; Bethlehem Steel, from $99,000,000 in 1949 to $126,000,000 in 1950; Socony Vacuum from $98,000,000 in 1949 to $125,000,000 in 1950, and so forth.

These quotations are merely to reveal a small picture of the unfortunate scramble for profits during this war mobilization crisis. When the propagandists proceed to condemn labor and the wage earner every time tie-ups, work stoppages, or strikes take place, they should also let the American public know that patriotic sacrifice in America is not a one-way street. Charles Wilson is a man of great ability in executive capacity as he has demonstrated during his long success as a business executive. Up until now, Mr. Wilson has not convinced the American public that he is willing to grasp both sides of our economic picture and recognize the importance of our No. 1 force in American production; to wit, manpower and labor.

Yesterday I read in the newspapers and heard over the radio where railway management is asking for a 6-percent increase on freight rates and an additional increase on mail transportation. During the last 6 months, the trend on the part of management, not only in the railroad field, but in other fields, has been to take advantage of this crisis to further build their profit margin and this policy has sapped the worker's pay check to such an extent that millions of our wage earners today have cashed in their Government bonds and most of their available assets in order to survive inflation.

From the very beginning of our national emergency, American labor has led the fight for effective control of the cost of living and other measures necessary to insure economic stabilization.

INDUSTRIAL CHAOS COULD RUIN US

Mr. Speaker, up to now, I have not heard the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, or these other powerful business organizations, come to Washington or offer any program for price roll-backs, control of food costs, or rents; on the other hand, I have heard numerous demands on the part of labor organizations that action be taken and they have submitted constructive suggestions. These appeals have gone unheeded by Mobilization Czar Wilson. Unless a policy of cooperation is inaugurated immediately, on the part of Mr. Wilson as Economic Stabilizer and the business and industrial interests of this country to cooperate with the manpower segment of our economy, we will enter a period of industrial chaos and turmoil. This would be the condition which Mr. Stalin and the Communists are striving to bring about. If this situation occurs, the majority of commentators in the newspapers and on the radio will again send out their blasts that labor and the wage earners are failing the Government in this crisis.

The profiteer has sabotaged the Government so far in our war-mobilization program. The profiteer brings about inflation and siphons from the American home the wages that are so necessary to provide happiness and contentment and allow millions to enjoy the American way of life. The United Press made a spot check of grocers in 26 cities across our country and found that food to the American family has gone up approximately 15 percent since last June. If the same rate of increase continues for a year, it would mean an increase of about 30 percent. Rentals in our cities throughout the country have been and are further skyrocketing by reason of the unfortunate decontrol action of our Congress last session. The rise in price of clothing, furniture, and other necessities is adding flames to the conflagration.

This Congress has also the responsibility to enact a tax bill. This tax legislation must not further deplete the pay check of the lower- and middle-income groups. If Congress closes the tax loopholes wherein tax dodgers are cheating the Government out of billions of dollars, it will aid greatly to relieve the burden on the small-tax payer. This will also avert the possibility of the enacting of a Federal sales tax which some Members advocate to further reduce the pay check of the lower-income groups. The three No. 1 problems which Price Stabilizer Wilson and this Congress must solve to prevent the wrecking of our mobilization program and industrial chaos are: Prices, rent control, and taxes. If these three problems are not solved, higher wages must follow the cost of living, and we will embark on the pathway of ruinous inflation. The time is short and the threat is critical. We must have action now.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I just want to ask the gentleman who is responsible for the appointment of the Wilsons and the Harrimans and the rest of the representatives of big business?

Mr. MADDEN. He was appointed by the President.

Mr. GROSS. That is what I thought.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to proceed for 10 additional minutes and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is easy to understand the attitude of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN]. Labor thought that it had a hard-and-fast agreement with the administration for anything and everything, for everything for which it might ask in return for its political support given in 1948 and 1950. Now it finds that, under the stress of war, other people's interests have to be taken into consideration and Mr. Truman just cannot deliver without endangering the defense program.

If I might be permitted, I would like to follow the gentleman's line of argument—the argument which he made in behalf of his people, mainly industrialists, mainly union men. Following his plea for organized labor I would be justified by saying that, in my judgment, the prices ought to be rolled back for the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan. They should be exempt from taxes of all kinds, and each and every one of them ought to have a subsidy so that he or she would be satisfied. Farmers should be paid whatever their organizations demand for their members and there should be no ceilings on the price of the merchandise manufactured in the Fourth District or on the wages paid there. That is about the sum and substance of the gentleman's argument as he speaks for organized labor. It is about the sum and substance of the argument made by 16 distinguished Members of the other body from cotton-growing States who went down to the White House a while ago and asked the President to avoid the imposition of any price fixing that would interfere with the sale of cotton. It is the usual plea. Everybody is in favor of taxing someone else, but does not want any part of that burden imposed on him. We seem to be much alike.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] said that the President was interfering with collective bargaining because he was following a course which would not permit the labor unions, which have enormous political power, to bargain with management for wages fixed at a stabilization figure. Management has not been disposed to deny an increase in wages that organized labor has asked recently. Why? Because, after granting the increase, as did steel, management just tacked the increase in wages, plus a little something for itself on the price of the product they sold. So soaking the consumer—once for labor and once for itself. Motors tried it, but got caught when they tried to increase the price of the cars they sold.

But the gentleman did not say anything about collective bargaining generally. He is talking about collective bargaining for the unions.

I wonder if the unions are to have collective bargaining, and if they are to be permitted to refuse to work when they do not get what they ask, is there any reason why the postal employees who write they receive much less than industrial workers, should not bargain collectively—walk out if they do not get what they ask? Why should not those wives that keep writing to Congressmen when their husbands are drafted, leaving them with a dependent child or children, have the right to bargain collectively with General Hershey as to whether their husbands shall go to war? Why should not the men who are conscripted or who enlist have collective bargaining rights with the draft organization to determine whether they should be taken and, if taken, where they should go and what they should do, how much they should be paid, how long they should serve?

This collective bargaining business, if I understand it, while necessary and advisable in mass production industries in peacetime just goes out the window when the country is in war.

The gentleman said in substance that unless organized labor got what it wanted there would be chaos, there would be strikes. I wonder about that, too. Can one man strike for higher wages in wartime and yet another be forced to throw up his hands and his job, leave his wife and his family, as they are being forced to do? Do what, where Uncle Sam directs? In wartime have I the right to refuse to work when my neighbor is taken, forced to work, and fight? What kind of equality is that? This collective bargaining business ought to work for all of us, with everyone, or for none of us.

I wonder how long the gentleman thinks the people of America, when their sons, their fathers, and their husbands are being conscripted to fight abroad, will submit to strikes by organized labor, or anyone else, for that matter, when those strikes interfere with supplying the men who are doing the fighting with the things they need in order that they may fight successfully? As I listened to the gentleman it almost seemed he was telling us that unless the President gave the unions what they wanted the unions would walk out on their leaders with all-out strikes.

The gentleman said that the railroads arbitrarily refused—and I hold no brief for the railroads; I have no stock in the railroads—to make any concession in the recent disputes. Let us see about that. The President, under the authority given him by Congress and under the law which the Congress enacted, and which has been in force for many years, appointed mediation boards. They heard the witnesses offered by the companies and by the unions. They made findings of fact on both occasions, which the unions refused to accept after the union's bargaining representatives had signed on the dotted line.

David Lawrence commented on that in today's Star, as follows:

TWO VERY BAD PRECEDENTS SET—LABOR'S WAGE BOARD WALKOUT, RAIL UNION'S REPUDIATION OF PACT HURT DEFENSE EFFORT

Two very bad precedents have been recorded in the last few days which can rise to plague the whole defense effort.

One is a walkout on the Wage Stabilization Board aimed really at the absence of a labor man at the top level in the Defense Mobilization Office. Even though the Government has gone to the only place where it could possibly go to find management ability to supervise the production program for defense, labor thinks this management function must somehow be divided and an equal voice given to labor.

The other precedent is a repudiation of signatures affixed by the presidents of four railroad unions at a White House conference with mediator Steelman and the claim that no union agreement is valid unless ratified by another group of representatives with presumably higher authority.

This opens the way for management representatives to do the same thing. They, too, apparently now can sign agreements and, if their higher officials don't like them, cry out that the agreements were only tentative and subject to ratification.

Thus a board of directors of a big corporation can upset the applecart by claiming that the president of a company either exceeded his authority or that he was acting only on the assumption that his board of directors would later have a chance to approve or disapprove. Conceivably the way is open to stockholders to go still further and by their vote reject an agreement approved by a board of directors.

The truth of the matter is that collective bargaining is doomed if it runs up against such a blind alley. Labor-union chiefs might well ponder what they are doing to the cause of collective bargaining by reversing their historic attitude in support of the viewpoint which it has taken so long for the National Labor Relations Board and the courts to establish—namely, that the employer is responsible for the acts of his agents even down to the foreman. Certainly no NLRB or court decision would ever hold that the agreement made by a bona fide negotiating committee for the employer was without binding effect.

The railroad brotherhoods are among the oldest and hitherto have been considered among the best of America's trade-unions. Their record for honorable dealing has been without blemish. But now the brotherhoods are in the public position of claiming that a signature by a union president who has been negotiating for his union isn't worth its weight in fountain-pen ink.

Much more realistic is the view that any negotiating representative who isn't fully acquainted in advance with the limits that will be acceptable to his union should not have been entrusted with the task of negotiation in the first place. There is need for a further examination of the powers of negotiating representatives before they enter mediation conferences on disputes which, if unsettled, can bring hundreds of millions of dollars of losses to innocent bystanders.

The revolt against the Wage Stabilization Board appointed by Defense Mobilizer Wilson is a step calculated by the labor-union leaders to force a division in the management of the defense program. They openly concede they are not objecting so much to the 10 percent formula for wage controls as they are to the process by which it was made. They are attacking Mr. Wilson for venturing even to suggest the program for consideration by the Wage Board. The two-headed Hillman-Knudsen arrangement in the last war didn't work, and such a set-up will not work this time.

Equal representation with management on boards that decide labor questions is the unequivocal right of labor unions, but this is as far as labor representation should go unless labor can come forward with some one of the managerial genius of Charles E. Wilson, of General Electric.

In such a contingency the genius, no matter where he came from, should have complete control at the top, just as Mr. Wilson has today. The latter was appointed because he knows how to exercise management functions and how to deal with managements which are entrusted with billions of defense orders. He wasn't chosen for ideological reasons, and any effort to make it appear that way merely breeds dissension and makes impossible an efficient set-up at the top level.

If political pressure is to decide who shall really manage the defense program, then defeat on the production front is a distinct possibility. The mere fact that the labor unions are running to Mr. Truman in the hope of exerting political pressure is a sign that they think that's the way to get one of their partisans appointed to coequal authority with Mr. Wilson. It remains to be seen how Mr. Truman will react to this pressure.

I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN]: Do the unions believe in arbitration, in mediation, or are they to follow a rule which says, "We will tell you what we will take, and we won't work for any less"?

If we are to have collective bargaining, why should not the farmer bargain? I do not know who he would bargain with. He might bargain with the fellow he sold his produce to. But in the end, if he followed some unions, he would say, "You will pay so much or you don't get the beef, you don't get the eggs, you don't get the milk." That is the attitude the gentleman has. That is the attitude, apparently, of the unions. But the farmer and the man who sells merchandise sell at the price the demand fixes.

I repeat again, I believe in unions. I think they must have the power to bargain collectively. But there is also a limit to what they may do when they strike and endanger the public safety, health, or welfare. Then old Uncle Sam will have to take over.

Another point the gentleman made—and I am critical only of his argument, not of him—was this: He said these companies are making excessive profits. That is always the story. I have heard that argument about excessive profits many, many times over the years. That is always the story, the other fellow is making too much.

All my life I have lived in Michigan, and I never at any time had as much money as Henry Ford—never. So what? It never bothered me, never worried me. I never expected to have as much. And I never cussed out Henry because he charged so much—made so much. I had a car when I would not have had one had it not been made and sold by Henry. And Henry Ford was one man who never wasted his money on chorus girls, horse races, or in any foolish or sinful ways.

Yes, Henry Ford made a whale of a profit. Hundreds of thousands of people are glad he did, have enjoyed many things because he made millions, and he created, gave, and paid for jobs of millions of workers who are now paying good salaries to union officers.

So I have been content in my ignorant way to go along with taking what I could earn, be thankful for what I did have—not envious of someone who earned and had more.

The answer to the argument that someone in industry is making too much money seems to be this: Some of these unions have millions upon millions of dollars in cash and bonds. I recall very well a meeting that one union had, I think it was the teamsters' union in New Jersey. They had something like $4,000,000 in cash and some $4,000,000 in bonds. They authorized the executive committee to spend as much of those as might be necessary to defeat certain named Congressmen at the next election. If that was the teamsters' union and we have the trainmen and the CIO, and we have the A. F. of L., and we have the mechanics and all the rest of them, each with money in the treasury—those unions admittedly have more than $20,000,000—if some greedy crooked industrialist is making too much money, would it not seem to be fair for those unions and their officers to just establish some factory somewhere and operate business the way it ought to be run and make that excessive profit for the union? But I have never known of a union going into business, getting on the other side of the fence. So much for that.

Did anyone here ever hear of John L. Lewis, who is always cussing out the mine owners, locating or buying a mine, hiring and paying a wage, even a starvation wage, to a miner? With his $25,000 and plus a year, John ought to be able to buy a mine, even if it was just a little one. No, John would rather squeeze the small home owner out of a quarter or two on each ton of coal he must have to keep his family warm.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS] a question. I know the gentleman has limitless courage. Does he realize that after making the speech that he did today that tomorrow or in the near future he will be accused of giving aid and comfort to Stalin?

Mr. MORRIS. I do not know what I may be accused of. I only know that in my judgment I told the truth. I did it for the purpose of trying to be of help and of benefit to our Nation, which we all love. I probably will be very severely criticized by some and maybe by most—I do not know. But as I said in the beginning I am willing to give my political life and my physical life for my country. I know not what effect the speech will have. I only know what was intended, and it was intended as a service to the people I represent and to the greatest Nation upon the earth, this our beloved land, for which I am willing to give anything, even my life.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman offered his life when he enlisted in a prior war. We who know him know that he spoke his mind today—that he rendered a great service to his country—that he spoke notwithstanding the fact he knew he will be criticized. I listened to his statement here not only with interest, but with profit. I am convinced that he expressed the sentiments of his people as he expressed the sentiments of the people in many other districts. Our people do not want this war. They do not know why we are in it. They do not know the purpose of this war. They do not trust Acheson nor the State Department. They know the administration is not consistent. They are fearful of the cost, not so much in dollars as in lives. They are fearful of its effect upon the security of our Republic even though the war be won. They have won two wars. They have seen those victories thrown away by double talking incompetent or unpatriotic diplomats, intent upon forgetting the security, the interests of the Republic—intent upon serving Britain or the Communists.

Going back to the question that I asked the gentleman. My experience here tells me that these columnists, a certain group of them, and some radio commentators, too, if you please, shortly will renew and intensify their attempts to silence or brand everyone who speaks out in behalf of his constituents and who opposes this movement into war—this attempt to put millions of our men in Europe. They will brand as unpatriotic everyone who opposes a full all-out war.

Charge him with following the Communist line. When I say I do not want another war in Europe because the other two wars got us nothing, the obvious answer is, "Sure, Stalin wants Americans to stay home." Hence I am a supporter of Stalin. That is the lying method they always use. But because our people wish to stay at home is no reason why I, when I express the wishes of my people, who are demanding that I do everything within my power to keep us out of this war, should be charged with speaking for Stalin. But that is just what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS] may expect from the pink, the Red, the international, commentators and radio announcers.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. Does not the gentleman agree with me that our primary duty here is to speak our conscience within the rules of parliamentary debate and to do that which we believe is to the interest of our country and forget as much as we possibly can our own selfish interests?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of course. Every honest, patriotic American should endeavor to follow that course; and he needs a thick hide—a conviction that cannot be shaken—an indifference to his political future—a stubbornness that borders on obstinacy.

Another we owe to our people and our country is not to swallow every improbable story designed to frighten us, even though it comes from the administration, from the brass hats, from the State Department, or from our political leaders here in the House. We ought to do our own thinking, and after we listen to what our constituents have to say, after we weigh their statements in the light of our own experience, use the best judgment and the common sense that God gave us.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS] said something about sending an army to Europe. It has been said we are fighting this war to contain communism. How can anyone contend that statement to be true when we know that under Acheson, who followed the Hiss line, the State Department today refuses to let those 450,000 trained fighting men, the Chinamen in Formosa, willing to fight the enemy who drove them out of China, go across that narrow arm of the sea and fight side by side with our men? I cannot understand why it is that the State Department wants our men to march on, be wounded or killed, but they do not want to let the Chinamen, who want to do the job, do at least part of it. Acheson and the State Department, which seems to be running this war, by their acts indicate that American lives are of less value than are the lives of the Chinese. Oh, the British do not want the Chinese Nationalists in this war because they say it might offend Stalin and it might offend the Chinese Communist Government and they might take over Hong Kong. Well, then, let the British fight the war in Korea. But if the reason given be the real one, then why do the British, if they do, want us to send a million or more men into Europe. Will not that offend Stalin, make him mad, provoke him to war?

I know that the gentleman's sole purpose in making his talk today was to relieve his mind, satisfy his conscience, advise his colleagues of the course his people and he want to follow, because he and they believe it to be the only one which will preserve this a free nation. He expressed better than could many the thoughts of my people.

You know the British long boast that the sun never sets on the British flag. Now, if we keep on in this business of one war after another Americans can say, but in sorrow, that the setting sun never fails to cast its fading light on a cross which marks the grave of an American who gave his life in a futile attempt to make good the visionary scheme of the one-worlders. Mighty as is our Nation, continuous warfare may make it a fading nation—eventually an extinct nation.

A few moments ago I read to the gentleman what Churchill said after World War I. He told us in effect that war—World War I—was none of our business. He said we made the whole situation worse because we went into World War I.

Mr. MORRIS. In that connection I would like to say that, in my judgment, our Nation was not built for empire. Our Constitution is such and our traditions are such that we cannot effectively become an empire. Rome built for an empire status.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. But it is no longer here.

Mr. MORRIS. And so did England, and so have others, but they have gone the way of all flesh, as far as great empires are concerned. However, they, to some extent, built for empire, but we were never even built for it. It was never intended by our founders, and when we get into that status we are getting into a status that is very probably going to mean disaster for us.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is one thought I have been trying to express. Now coming back to the thought as to the criticism the gentleman will receive; the gentleman referred to a statement by Justice Douglas, which was to the effect that if we continued on our present course and followed the present foreign policy we would be wiped out as a nation. Did you notice an editorial in the Washington Star of the seventeenth following that talk, which took him to task and said that he was speaking out of turn and, in effect, said he did not know what he was talking about?

That editorial reads as follows:

JUSTICE DOUGLAS ON FOREIGN POLICY

William O. Douglas, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, has sounded off again in a field where he has shown, at least once before, an extraordinary lack of good judgment. Last summer, while touring the Middle East, he stirred up a lot of ill will both for himself and his country by presuming to tell the Iranians, in a sort of know-it-all manner, that they ought to wake up, make every peasant a landlord, and work out Iran's "destiny according to its own genius, perhaps 10 percent communism, 15 percent capitalism and 75 percent something else." And now, out in Tucson, Ariz., he has taken it upon himself to cut loose against American foreign policy.

Thus, as reported by the Associated Press, Justice Douglas has told his Tucson listeners that "if we continue our present foreign policy, especially in Asia, if we continue in our present direction, we are doomed to disaster." He has told them that the Far East is in a revolution similar to our own American Revolution—"a revolution that cannot be bought off with dollars." He has told them, too, that the people out there have "a catalog of specific complaints" (such as the absence of schools and medical care) and that the United States never has addressed itself to those complaints. Finally, as a free gift to the Kremlin propagandists, he has had this to say: "We talk about democracy and justice and at the same time we support regimes in those countries whose object is to keep both democracy and justice out of the reach of the peasants for all time."

Justice Douglas' remarks are so sweeping and nonspecific that one must ask him some questions. Precisely what kind of foreign policy would he substitute for the one we are now following in Asia? When he refers to buying off revolutions with dollars, what is he talking about? How does he square that seemingly snide remark with the fact that the United States played a leading role, but not necessarily a wise one, in hastening the independence of lands like India, Indonesia, and the Philippines, and then lending or giving them money and other types of aid? As for the "specific catalog of complaints," does he hold us responsible for the conditions that have led to those complaints, and has he looked twice at the point 4 program? And just what does he mean when he says we support antidemocratic and unjust regimes?

Does he mean that we should wash our hands of the Bao Dai government in Indochina and let Ho Chi-minh's Communists take over? Does he mean that we ought to give up Korea so the Reds can drag it behind the iron curtain for the Kremlin? Does he mean, as far as China is concerned, that we should forthwith dump Chiang Kai-shek and cuddle up to Mao Tse-tung, that great and nonaggressive "agrarian reformer"? Does he mean, in short, that our foreign policy dooms us to disaster because we have made up our minds not to permit the Soviet Union to dominate and tyrannize the whole of Asia? What is he talking about? If he were running things, exactly how would he run them? Would he run them with his formula of 10 percent communism, 15 percent capitalism, and 75 percent something else? And what is the something else? Sheer muddleheadedness?

A member of the Supreme Court is entitled to respect. But Mr. Douglas, by injecting himself into a field that is really none of his business as a Justice, and by doing it in a way that does not appeal to the intelligence, has invited something less than an admiring reaction. The propriety of his off-the-bench remarks would be seriously open to question even if they were sound. They certainly have added neither to his own stature nor to the stature of the Nation's highest tribunal, which is supposed to hold itself aloof from the hurly-burly of domestic and world politics. In some ways, his conduct in this instance is faintly reminiscent of the time when Henry Wallace, while Secretary of Commerce, tried to uppercut and rabbit-punch the State Department.

That is an example of what the gentleman from Oklahoma may expect from some of those who do not fight wars, who were not in the war as the gentleman was, but who want someone else to do the fighting and pay the costs, from some who just cannot tolerate any opposition to their own views.

Mr. MORRIS. I may say to the gentleman that I expect it, of course. I do not claim to be any great student of history, but I have read history for some 30 years and I know something of what I am talking about. I know my statement will not meet with the approval of many and I realize that no doubt it will be distorted by some; yes, I know that that is the natural consequence to one who speaks out, however true his head and heart may be, if he truly speaks out in a time of hysteria, and we are in such a time at the present.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes; and I know something else the gentleman will get when he seeks advice. Sometimes we go here to those who are among our leaders on one or the other side of the aisle and not sure in our own minds ask: "What is the vote on this bill?"

The answer, "Well, the right thing to do is to vote 'no'; the sensible thing is to vote 'no,' but then, on the other hand, the expedient thing may be to vote 'yes'."

And so on this issue of world war III we will be told that we are in it; we must go along without protest; that we are disloyal if we refuse to follow a course which we believe will destroy the Republic.

The gentleman spoke about the need for Christianity. We are all agreed on that but too many think about it just in terms of its being a good objective. They do not consider whether the objective can be won. The internationalists are sincere and patriotic. They think that we are going to have universal, eternal peace by getting into some one world thing. This, they insist, is a great crusade. They ought to think about what happened when there were some other crusades a long, long time ago, in 1307. Those crusades lasted for years. Hundreds of thousands of people, men, women, and children—for children marched on some—died in those crusades to the Holy Land. Their purpose was fine, but they did not get peace.

And along with that I notice, talking about this thing of establishing peace and ending war, that in the Balkan States during the hundred years before 1948, 72 years and 6 months were years of war and conflict. So what will we get by wasting American manhood in a vain attempt to by war end war—establish permanent universal peace throughout the world? My fear is we will destroy ourselves.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, have I any time remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield it to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MORRIS. Talking about the Crusades, I may say that Peter the Hermit and Richard the Lionhearted beat up the war drums of the day back in the time of the Crusades, and the people actually believed that unless they did go to the Holy Land and wrest it away from the hated Mohammedans they might be struck down by a blow from Heaven. They went, of course, for I believe about a hundred years. But today no one would be so insane as to advocate a war against Mohammedanism by Christianity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. ALBERT and Mr. STEED asked and were given permission to extend their remarks and include newspaper articles.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. GATHINGS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include editorials.

61. Also, petition of John DeLaMater, secretary, Mount Pleasant Citizens Association, Washington, D. C., relative to appointing a committee to study the public transportation systems in the metropolitan area of Washington; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1951

(Legislative day of Monday, January 29, 1951)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. John C. Millian, D. D., district superintendent, Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Holy and eternal God, ruler of men and nations, bestower of grace, mercy, and peace, we bow humbly and prayerfully in Thy presence.

Keenly aware of our failures, we come in deep contrition praying that in Thy redeeming grace we may find strength for the facing of this hour.

As responsibility rests heavily upon us, wilt Thou endow us with that true wisdom which comes only from Thee, with that spiritual insight without which we are sightless, with that understanding heart whereby we can pray even for our enemies. May Thy divine spirit turn their hate into love and their deception into honest cooperation.

May our strength be renewed that we may rise above our faltering selves and with Thy help courageously bring peace to nations and freedom to the imprisoned souls of men.

We pray this in faith, believing for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 19, 1951, was dispensed with.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators may be permitted to present petitions and memorials, submit reports, introduce bills and joint resolutions, and offer matters for insertion in the RECORD, without debate, the time to be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents of the Douglas amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VISIT BY MEMBERS OF THE JAPANESE DIET

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before presentation of matters for the RECORD, the Chair wishes to say that the Japanese Diet has chosen four of its members representing different political groups to come to the United States to study our institutions, and stay among us for the purpose of carrying home with them such lessons as they may, in connection with our Government and its institutions, in order that they may create among the Japanese people and in the governmental circles of Japan a wider understanding of our institutions, our purposes, and our character.

I ask that the clerk read a brief statement ending with the names of the distinguished members of the Japanese Diet.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Under the sponsorship of the Department of the Army, and supervision of the United States Federal Security Agency, the following members of the Japanese Diet from both Houses have been selected by the Japanese Government to visit the United States in order to familiarize themselves with American methods in the field of public health and welfare.

It is my privilege and pleasure to welcome the following members of the Japanese Diet: Ryutaro Terashima, Buichi Oishi, M. D., Gishin Yamashita, and Miss Natsue Inoue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On behalf of the Senate the Chair desires to welcome these distinguished guests to our Chamber and to our country, and to express the hope that their visit among us will be pleasant and mutually profitable between the two peoples.

The Chair asks that the four members of the Japanese Diet, who are sitting in the rear of the Chamber, rise so the Members of the Senate may recognize them.

The four members of the Japanese Diet rose and were greeted with applause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thanks the delegation from the Japanese Diet and now asks unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by them.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A STATEMENT BEFORE THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES THIS 21ST DAY OF FEBRUARY IN THE YEAR 1951 BY FOUR MEMBERS OF THE JAPANESE DIET

(Statement presented by Mr. Ryutaro Terashima, leader of the group)

We members of the Japanese Diet arrived here on the 28th day of January to participate in the Japanese cultural exchange program under the auspices of the Department of the Army. The purpose of our mission has been to observe the administration of social welfare and public health in the United States of America and our more specific goal is to acquire information which will be helpful in revising the social-security system of our country.

Since our arrival under the kind and helpful supervision of the Federal Security Agency and through the cooperation of both the legislative bodies of the Congress of the United States and through our association with many groups of citizens outside of Government, we have been able to follow closely the legislative process as it pertains to social welfare and public health.

We eagerly look forward in the time still remaining with the sincere desire that we will be able to make further observations which will enable us to formulate more positive ideas in these fields.

You well knew that immediately after the war the state of our nation was one of extreme impoverishment, yet so fortunate for our people, through the humanitarian assistance of the people of the United States, we were able to rapidly reestablish ourselves upon a minimum level of subsistence. Once again we now are able to look to the future with the hope of making the lives of our people happy and to the rebuilding of a more peaceful and more democratic Japan. We feel that one of the most important problems facing us is the early establishment of an over-all social-security system in our country.

Our stay in the United States up to today has been about 3 weeks. It is, therefore, difficult for us to express a concise statement as to our impressions of America other than that we have already recognized the unique broad-mindedness of your people and have marveled at how they have adapted scientific developments to the utmost benefit to themselves and to mankind as a whole.

We desire the friendship of the United States; we dedicate ourselves to maintenance of closer relations between our respective nations; and we shall do our utmost in contributing to the peacefulness of the world and the happiness of mankind.

Today you, the Senate of the United States of America of the Eighty-second Congress, have extended to us the rare privilege of visiting your session, for which we express our deepest gratitude.

MEMBERS OF THE JAPANESE SOCIAL WELFARE MISSION VISITING THE UNITED STATES, JANUARY–APRIL 1951

Under the sponsorship of the Department of the Army and supervision of the United States Federal Security Agency, four Japanese Diet members from both houses have been selected by the Japanese Government to visit the United States in order to familiarize themselves with American methods in the field of public health and welfare. They arrived in Washington, D. C., on January 28, 1951, where they will remain for 3 weeks, visiting various public and private welfare organizations. Then they plan to tour the United States to study State, municipal, and local public health and social-security systems. The group wil be in the United States approximately 80 days. The mission is composed of the following persons: Ryutaro Terashima; Buichi Oishi, M. D.; Gishin Yamashita; Miss Natsue Inoue.

RYUTARO TERASHIMA

Liberal Party member of the House of Representatives from Chiba Prefecture; chairman of the welfare committee.

Mr. Terashima was born in Mangai Village, Chiba Prefecture, on March 31, 1911. He graduated from Chiba Prefectural Agricultural School in 1930 and the Daito Bunka Gaknin (Cultural College) in 1933. He has been an active journalist and also worked in various governmental positions, including the nonofficial staff Repatriating Farmers' Section, Planning Bureau, Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, 1945–48. He was elected a member of the House of Representatives in April 1947 and reelected in January 1949.

BUICHI OISHI, M. D.

Liberal Party member of the House of Representatives from Miyagi Prefecture; member of the welfare committee.

Mr. Oishi was born on June 19, 1909, in Sendai City, Miyagi Prefecture. He studied at Sendai Second Middle School and Second Higher School and was graduated from Tohuku Imperial University's School of Medicine in 1935. He remained at his alma mater as an assistant and lecturer until October 1947, when he was appointed chief of the Internal Medicine Section, National Sendai Hospital. Oishi was elected to the House of Representatives at a by-election in May 1948 and was reelected in January 1949.

Oishi has been outstanding in the field of medicine and as a member of the Japan Medical Association, Japan Academic Society of Internal Medicine, and a committeeman, Advisory Council on Social Security.

GISHIN YAMASHITA

Social Democratic Party member of the House of Councilors from Hiroshima Prefecture and chairman of the health and welfare committee; priest of Nishi Hongwanji Buddhist sect; educator and social worker.

Yamashita was born on March 21, 1894, in Kure City, Hiroshima Prefecture, and was graduated from the Buddhist College in 1927. Prior to his study at the Buddhist College he served in the Japanese Army as second lieutenant for several years. Yamashita served as lecturer at the Hiroshima Police School, 1940; nonofficial staff, Hiroshima Prefectural Office, 1942; director of War Orphans' Care Center in Hiroshima Prefecture, 1945; and was elected to the House of Councilors in 1947. He has been serving as chairman of the welfare committee since May 1948, to which post he was reelected in July 1950. He is also a member of the Social Security Advisory Council and the Community Chest Central Committee.

MISS NATSUE INOUE

Independent member of the House of Councilors; member of the welfare committee; president of the Japan Nursing Association.

Miss Inoue was born on July 25, 1898, in Hyogo Prefecture, and was graduated from the Nurses' Training School, Osaka Red Cross Hospital, in March 1917 and from Bedford College, London University in 1929, where she majored in public health nursing sponsored by the League of Red Cross Societies. Through self-study she passed the Japanese Government's high-school qualification examination in 1931 to become eligible for college entrance. She served as public health nursing instructor at the Public Health Institute, Tokyo, from 1940 to 1946; superintendent of nurses, Tokyo Central Red Cross Hospital, 1946-47; and was elected to the House of Councilors in April 1947. As president of the Japan Nursing Association since November 1946, she has been giving advice and guidance in nursing throughout Japan.

Miss Inoue published a brief history of nursing in Japan and a book entitled "Ethics in Nursing." She is here to study public health and welfare work in the field of nursing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT OF NATIONAL SOCIETY OF DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION

A letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, for the year ended April 1, 1950 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to authorize immediate development of the St. Lawrence waterway

"Whereas development of the St. Lawrence waterway is vital to full development of the country's resources and inland transportation facilities; and

"Whereas for years the governors and legislatures of the State of Wisconsin, regardless of political affiliation, have gone on record as favoring this great project; and

"Whereas the demand for this seaway is greater than ever today to open the Great Lakes to navigation by seagoing vessels and furnish Midwest farm, factory, mine, and shipyard products access to the markets of the world; and

"Whereas this seaway will increase our national security, stimulate development of the resources of the Midwest, lower transportation costs, and conserve our natural resources: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to authorize development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway for navigation by seagoing vessels at the earliest practicable date; and be it further

"Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the clerk of each House of the Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

"GEORGE M. SMITH,
"President of the Senate.
"THOMAS M. DONAHUE,
"Chief Clerk of the Senate.
"ORA R. RICE,
"Speaker of the Assembly.
"ARTHUR L. MAY,
"Chief Clerk of the Assembly."

A concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of New York, relating to public assistance programs by the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See text of concurrent resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. IVES on February 19, 1951, p. 1310, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The petition of Mrs. J. M. Leader, of Aurora, Ill., relating to the drafting of 18-year-old boys, etc.; to the Committee on Armed Services.

A resolution adopted by Chapter No. 1, Disabled American Veterans, Oahu, T. H., favoring the continuation of Drew Pearson on the air as a newscaster; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA, LATVIA, AND ESTONIA—RESOLUTION OF COUNCIL OF LITHUANIAN SOCIETIES, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, Republic of Lithuania Day, February 16, was an occasion of outstanding importance to the Lithuanian-American colony of Maryland. In happier days, prior to the initiation of Communist aggression in Europe, it was a day of rejoicing and celebration, for Lithuania was free after years of enslavement and its progress in cultural and economic fields was of an extraordinary nature.

In the dark days which have descended upon the Baltic countries, Republic of Lithuania Day, while no longer an occasion for rejoicing, is replete with significance to those among us of Lithuanian birth and descent in that it serves to keep alive and strengthen the ideals of liberty and the determination that has never been extinguished in the hearts of free people anywhere to strive unceasingly until freedom again is achieved.

It was in accordance with this spirit that the Baltimore Council of Lithuanian Societies adopted a resolution in commemoration of the thirty-third anniversary of the declaration of independence by the people of Lithuania at its 1951 Republic of Lithuania celebration.

I present the resolution for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, citizens of Baltimore, Md., gathered under the sponsorship of the Council of Lithuanian Societies, in commemoration of the thirty-third anniversary of the declaration of independence by the people of Lithuania, held on the 16th day of February 1951 at Lithuanian Hall, after due deliberations regarding the present international situation, take note of the following:

The United States of America, together with other United Nations members, is engaged in a bloody struggle in Korea defending the freedom of peace-loving people against Communist aggressors.

We believe the bold and determined steps taken by the United States of America to protect a defenseless people emerging into a status of independent statehood rallied the forces of freedom everywhere and revived suffering mankind's faith in American policy objectives.

Let it not be forgotten, however, that the Baltic States of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia constitute the original "Korea," since they were the first to be overrun by the Communist forces more than 10 years ago. These same nations are still under Communist domination and they are being inhumanly subjected to extermination by the genocidal policy of the Soviet rulers.

Furthermore, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia were members in good standing of the League of Nations. On the other hand, the Soviet Union, which had been expelled from the League because of the aggressive war it waged against Finland, is a member of the United Nations with a veto power to block the complaints of the victimized Baltic States.

We agree with the statement of the President of the United States in his last state of the Union message to Congress, that free and independent nations can band together in a world order based on law, and that the cornerstone of such a peaceful world has been laid in the United Nations. But the President's further statement: "The imperialism of the czars has been replaced by the even more ambitious, more crafty and menacing imperialism of the rulers of the Soviet Union," indicates to us that the Soviet Union does not intend to abide by the Charter of the United Nations.

Wherefore it is respectfully requested that the United States of America continue to maintain its world leadership in its efforts to achieve international peace founded on principles of freedom and justice, and we urge the President and the Secretary of State to adopt appropriate measures in order to accomplish the following:

1. To bring up the matter of the liberation of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia in the open international forum of the UN;

2. To invoke the aid of the UN in condemning and stopping the crime of genocide which is being perpetrated in Lithuania and other Baltic countries by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and its ruling Communist Party;

3. The release of all of the political prisoners now in concentration camps and under forced labor in the Soviet Union;

4. To allow freedom of religion to all people;

5. To assist the Lithuanian Nation and the other Baltic States when the forces of Communist imperialism are crushed, in the re-establishment of a separate national sovereignty and true freedom and independence; and

6. To demand the ouster of the Soviet Union from membership in the UN if it continues with its flagrant violations of the United Nations Charter.

COUNCIL OF LITHUANIAN SOCIETIES,

By MARTIN RAILA, Secretary.

ESTABLISHMENT OF UNITS AND AGENCIES OF GOVERNMENT IN CUMBERLAND, MD.—RESOLUTIONS OF HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF MARYLAND

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, attention has been called previously by me to the depressed economic condition now prevalent in the Cumberland area of western Maryland. Pertinent to this matter are two resolutions which I am sending to the desk which were adopted by the House of Delegates of Maryland, one requesting that the proposed Quartermaster Research Laboratory be located in the city of Cumberland, the other asking that the city of Cumberland be considered as a site for any Government offices moved from Washington.

In line with President Truman's expressed interest in moves to rehabilitate such depressed economic areas it is sincerely hoped that some assistance may be afforded by the Federal Government toward this very desirable end.

I present the resolutions for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received and appropriately referred, and, under the rule, printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Armed Services:

"House Resolution 21

"House resolution requesting that the proposed Quartermaster Research Laboratory be located in the city of Cumberland

"Whereas the Department of National Defense has under consideration the possible construction of a Quartermaster Research Laboratory; and

"Whereas the city of Cumberland would offer many advantages as a site for this research laboratory among which are easy accessibility to the District of Columbia, favorable railroad transportation, and a large pool of intelligent workmen; and

"Whereas locating the proposed Quartermaster Research Laboratory in the city of Cumberland also would help to alleviate the serious conditions of unemployment now existing in that area: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That Gen. George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense, be requested to give serious consideration to the possibility of constructing the proposed Quartermaster Research Laboratory in the city of Cumberland and to the numerous advantages offered by that site for the new laboratory; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to Gen. George C. Marshall, and to each member of the Maryland delegation in the Congress of the United States.

MINIMUM PRICE CEILINGS ON MILK—RESOLUTION OF PURE MILK PRODUCTS COOPERATIVE, FOND DU LAC, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received from William O. Perdue, general manager of the Pure Milk Products Cooperative, of 18 West First Street, Fond du Lac, Wis., an important resolution regarding the maintenance of minimum price ceilings on milk in non-Federal milk order areas. I ask unanimous consent that the text of Mr. Perdue's resolution be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD and be thereafter referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the State board of directors of Pure Milk Products Cooperative, in official session at Fond du Lac, February 8, 1951, does hereby urge the retention of title 4 of the Defense Production Act which contains the Cole-Ives amendment providing for minimum price ceilings on milk in non-Federal order areas. It is pointed out that there is no conflict as between this amendment and the Federal Marketing Agreement Act. On the contrary, the effect of the Cole-Ives amendment will be to aid in preserving price balances as between the Federal and the non-Federal order markets; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Wisconsin's Senators and Congressmen, urging them to support and defend the Cole-Ives amendment to the Defense Production Act of 1950 as presently written, together with other safeguards contained in the act relating to minimum price ceilings for milk in Federal order markets and for milk and dairy products in other markets.

PROTEST AGAINST TAXATION OF MUNICIPAL BOND INTEREST—RESOLUTION OF WAUSAU (WIS.) COMMON COUNCIL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have this morning received from J. L. Brown, city clerk, of Wausau, Wis., a resolution adopted by the common council of that community on February 13. The resolution opposes the proposal of the Secretary of the Treasury to tax the interest on municipal bonds. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and be thereafter referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas, heretofore, interest on municipal bonds has not been subject to Federal income taxation; and

Whereas such freedom from income tax has made it possible for municipalities to borrow money for improvements at a low rate of interest; and

Whereas the city of Wausau has heretofore been able to finance public improvements at an extremely low rate of interest because of such income-tax exemption; and

Whereas it has now been proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury that interest on municipal bonds be subjected to income tax; and

Whereas there have been similar proposals in the past all of which have been decisively defeated in the interest of the welfare of municipalities; and

Whereas if the interest on municipal bonds is subjected to income tax as proposed, the result would be merely to raise the interest rates which municipalities would be obligated to pay on their obligations, and thereby the burden of such income taxes would be transferred to the general property taxpayer; and

Whereas such a step would make it difficult and far more costly to municipalities to finance public improvements; and

Whereas such a step would place an undue, unwarranted, and unnecessary burden upon municipalities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Common Council of the City of Wausau, That any attempt to subject interest on municipal bonds to Federal income taxation be and is opposed; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk send a copy of this resolution to the Honorable REID F. MURRAY, Congressman from the Seventh Congressional District, and to Senator WILEY and Senator MCCARTHY.

AID TO VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN ASSOCIATION OF DIRECTORS OF VOCATIONAL AND ADULT EDUCATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning from John G. Ausman, president of the Wisconsin Association of Directors of Vocational and Adult Education, an important resolution on the subject of continued fulfilling of this vital program. We of Wisconsin have pioneered in the field of vocational training and for that reason I am particularly interested in the comments made by that able group of American leaders. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution adopted at the meeting in Madison by the association be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD, and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the George-Barden Act, Public Law 586, Seventy-ninth Congress, chapter 725, second session, authorized an appropriation of $28,850,000 as aid to the States for the further development of vocational education; and

Whereas an appropriation of $19,842,759.97 has been made available by Congress under the provisions of Public Law 586, Seventy-ninth Congress, and

Whereas the State of Wisconsin has received an annual allotment of $465,450.77 for instruction in agriculture, distributive occupations, home economics, and trades and industries which has been expended for purposes authorized in the act, and contributes materially to the successful program of vocational education in the State; and

Whereas the budget submitted by President Truman to the present session of Congress recommends an appropriation of only $9,842,760 under the provisions of this act to be distributed under the formula set up in the act and Wisconsin's allotment of aid will, therefore, be reduced to $181,934.03, and the Bureau of the Budget has recommended that $10,000,000 available in the past as aid to the States for vocational education be appropriated to be used for defense training and training for essential civilian employment only, and not subject to apportionment under the provisions of the act; and

Whereas the Wisconsin Association of Local Directors of Vocational and Adult Education meeting in Madison on Wednesday, February 7, respectfully wishes to point out to each Member of Congress from Wisconsin that—

1. This reduced appropriation will seriously hamper the present program of vocational education operating in the State in the fields of vocational agriculture, trade, and industrial education, home economics, and distributive education and may result in the discontinuance of programs in communities in the State.

2. That the existing programs of vocational education contribute materially to our economy from the standpoint of defense training: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Wisconsin Association of Local Directors of Vocational and Adult Education urge Members of Congress from Wisconsin that funds appropriated under the provisions of Public Law 586 as aid to the States for vocational education should not at this time be reduced but should be increased to the full $28,850,000 authorized in the act; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to every Member of Congress from the State of Wisconsin by the president of the Wisconsin Association of Local Directors of Vocational and Adult Education.

FOOD FOR THE PEOPLE OF INDIA—EDITORIAL FROM THE HINDUSTAN TIMES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on February 15, I was proud to be a cosponsor of proposed legislation designed to provide 2,000,000 tons of food grains for the people of India. It is my sincere hope that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will soon act favorably to report this measure to the floor of the Senate for action.

This proposed legislation is an indication of the growing spirit of friendship by the people of the United States for the people of India. As evidence of that friendship, I hold in my hand an editorial from the Hindustan Times of February 14, 1951, published in New Delhi, India. I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed at this point in the body of the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

[From the Hindustan Times, New Delhi, India, of February 14, 1951]

A GENEROUS GESTURE

President Truman's message to Congress to authorize the supply of 2,000,000 tons of food grains for India will be widely welcomed in this country, especially, coming as it does after the recent divergence in the United States and Indian foreign policies over Korea. Referring to these differences, President Truman stated that they "should not blind us to the needs of the Indian people." He added: "These differences must not deflect us from our tradition of friendly aid to alleviate human suffering." The Indian Prime Minister has also stated in Parliament that India was not going to allow these differences to stand in the way of continued friendship with the United States. What will make the American gift more worth while, when it comes, is that it is being offered unconditionally, without any attempt to exact a price from India. The spirit of this gesture is bound to be deeply appreciated in this country. Indians have always responded warmly to acts of kindness and we have no doubt that as a result of American assistance received at a time when the rationing system in the country is on the point of breakdown, there will be increasing cordiality and friendship in the relationship between the two countries. India will remember with gratitude the help rendered in this regard by the timely declaration of sympathy by Mr. Hoover, whose word must have fortified President Truman, and the undoubted influence exerted on her behalf by the United States Ambassador, Mr. Loy Henderson.

Under the scheme of relief placed by President Truman before the United States Congress, India will receive 1,000,000 tons of food grains as an outright gift, India paying the transport charges. The other million tons, for which also the President has asked for authorization, will be sent after an American mission has made on-the-spot appraisal of conditions in this country. Proceeds from the sale of these food grains in Indian currency will be placed in a special account which will be utilized for the improvement of Indian agriculture and development of natural resources, in order to deal with the root causes of recurring food crises. To get over the shipping difficulty, ships are to be taken from the American moth-ball fleet and on their return voyages these ships will help to relieve the shortage of shipping impeding the flow of scarce materials to the United States of America. Thus not only will the grant of food grains relieve the immediate food shortage but the use of counterpart funds, as in the case of other ECA countries, will help in the rehabilitation of Indian agriculture. India's food shortage is chronic in the sense that, with the separation of Burma and the creation of Pakistan, large food-growing areas have ceased to be part of the country and, consequently, food sufficiency can come only by way of increased production and the bringing of fresh land under cultivation. American generosity will thus be of assistance to us in forging ahead with our program of food self-sufficiency as well. It is to be hoped that the legislation will be passed by the United States Congress without unnecessary delay, as the time factor is of vital importance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on Armed Services:

H. R. 1601. A bill to authorize the construction of modern naval vessels, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 118).

By Mr. MAGNUSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

S. 683. A bill authorizing vessels of Canadian registry to transport iron ore between United States ports on the Great Lakes during 1951; without amendment (Rept. No. 119).

NATIONAL SECURITY TRAINING ACT OF 1951—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report unanimously, with amendments, the bill (S. 1) to provide for the common defense by establishing a universal training program, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 117) thereon. The amendments are in the nature of a substitute to the original text of the bill and to the title.

I should like to call the attention of the Senators to the fact that the printed bill and the committee report should be available for distribution tomorrow. The committee hearings have been available for several days and a great number of copies have been sent to the various Senators.

This bill addresses itself to a very fundamental proposition.

The greater the degree of familiarity with the text of the legislation which each Member of the Senate has, the more effective will our consideration of the legislation be.

For that reason I am hopeful that the Senators will find it possible to give to this bill and the committee report such advance study as the very crowded schedule of a Senator will permit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend to nations with which the United States engages in armed conflict the provisions of the Trading With the Enemy Act, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement by me explaining its provisions be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Ohio will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 937) to extend to nations with which the United States engages in armed conflict the provisions of the Trading With the Enemy Act, introduced by Mr. BRICKER, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The statement presented by Mr. BRICKER is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BRICKER

During the latter days of the second session of the Eighty-first Congress, I introduced S. 4244, a bill to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act. The purpose of the bill was to broaden the provisions to include situations such as that we now face in the Far East.

We live in a day of undeclared war, of police action, of Communist-directed revolt. Whatever term we use, we must face the fact that American boys are being sent into battle against troops either of nations or directed and supported by nations with whom this country maintains commercial or even ostensibly amicable relations. I cannot condone sending supplies of any sort, particularly military matériel, to any nation supporting an armed force in conflict with our own. For that reason, I am reintroducing in the Eighty-second Congress my amendments to the Trading With the Enemy Act, to make it clear that no one may sell or ship articles of trade to nations who are, in fact, allied against the United States.

MASWOOD BAKHT CHOWDHURY ET AL.—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LANGER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 882) for the relief of Maswood Bakht Chowdhury, Miftahuj Jaman or Pirut Miah, Nosib Ali, Asoddar Ali, Abdul Karim, Konor Ali, Sogone Ali, Rofiquc Uddin Chowdhury, Abdul Rohim, Harun Chowdory, and Sunafor Ullah, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

EMERGENCY FOOD AID TO INDIA—ADDITIONAL SPONSOR OF BILL

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, on last Thursday, February 15, on behalf of myself and a bipartisan group of 29 other Members of the Senate, I introduced Senate bill 872, to furnish emergency food aid to India. Since that time the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] has requested that his name be added to the group of sponsors. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania be added to the sponsors of the bill (S. 872).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS WAR MATERIALS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is no doubt that in the years since the end of hostilities in World War II the United States destroyed, abandoned, gave away, or lost billions of dollars' worth of military equipment in various parts of the world. In our present danger we wish that we had kept some of this equipment. It is conceivable that we could save literally billions of dollars if we knew where it is today. So far as I know, no complete inventory of it is available. I, therefore, submit for appropriate reference a resolution providing for an investigation of the disposition of all the materials which were declared surplus after the end of hostilities in World War II. If we can find out what we had, we will know what we can expect to salvage in our present crisis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 75) was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of all phases of the disposition by the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Government of materials declared surplus to the needs of the Government after World War II.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than 3 months after the date on which this resolution is agreed to, the results of such study and investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 1 OF 1951, RELATING TO RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. CAPEHART submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 76), which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

Resolved, That the Senate does not favor the Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1951 transmitted to Congress by the President on February 19, 1951.

STUDY OF PROPOSED SALE OF GERMAN EMBASSY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. LANGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 77), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is directed to make a full and complete study concerning the proposed sale of the property in the District of Columbia known as the German Embassy, and to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such study together with its recommendations as to the advisability of such sale.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is hereby requested to postpone the proposed sale of the German Embassy until the completion of the study referred to in the first section of this resolution.

THE CANADIAN DEFENSE EFFORT

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, having received a number of requests for information concerning the Canadian defense effort, I have looked into this matter which interests so many Americans and find that a greatly enlarged defense program was announced on February 5 in the Canadian House of Commons by Hon. Brooke Claxton, Minister of National Defense of Canada. The new program covers the next three fiscal years, that is, from April 1, 1951, to March 31, 1954.

I ask unanimous consent to have a statement of the chief features of the Canadian defense effort printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT

1. Cost: The total cost of the program is estimated at over $5,000,000,000. The cost in the next fiscal year is put at about $1,600,000,000. Defense expenditures 4 years ago were $194,000,000. The original vote for the current fiscal year before the Korean War began was $425,000,000. (This estimate was enlarged last autumn by a further vote of $142,000,000 and by a special vote of $300,000,000 to cover the cost of equipment to be supplied to North Atlantic Treaty countries under mutual aid.) There has been almost a fourfold increase in defense estimates in the last year (from $425,000,000 to $1,600,000,000).

2. Air Force: A striking feature of the new program is the expansion of the Canadian Air Force to a total of 40 squadrons and the provision of training facilities for air crews for a greatly increased number of Canadians and others. Of the 40 squadrons, 11 comprising an air division will be made available to General Eisenhower's command, including 1 already in the United Kingdom and 2 to be sent overseas before long. These will all be fighter squadrons equipped with Sabre and Canuck jet aircraft. (The Canuck is an all-weather, two-engine fighter of Canadian design and very high performance.)

Arrangements are already in effect for the training of aircrews in Canada from five Western European countries and the United Kingdom. The facilities are to be expanded to permit an out-turn of over 3,000 aircrew per annum, of whom about 1,100 will be trained for other NAT countries under mutual aid.

The strength of the Canadian air force will be expanded by the addition of 3,000 planes. This will involve a considerable expansion of the Canadian aircraft industry for production of the latest types for the Canadian air force and for other countries.

For continental defense a screen of radar stations is being developed in cooperation with the United States. These are being equipped with the latest apparatus and supported by fighter squadrons. The American and Canadian radar chains will be linked to form a single system, of which about one-quarter will be in Canada.

3. Army: A brigade group (or regimental combat team) is to be made available for service in Western Europe under General Eisenhower's command. It is hoped that it may arrive in Europe at about the same time as additional United States forces.

A specially trained airborne striking force will continue to be maintained in Canada to deal with any possible attempts at landings in Canadian territory. The army will also provide strong formations of antiaircraft artillery for local defense.

Under mutual aid the armament and ammunition for one infantry division, which was offered to NATO last August, was shipped to the Netherlands late in 1950. Allocation of similar equipment for a second division has just been made by NATO and it will be shipped shortly. The allocation to Luxemburg of armament for an artillery regiment has also just been announced. As arrangements are completed for the replacement of Canadian stocks by United States types, transfers of the balance of Canadian stocks of United Kingdom types will be continued. (The Canadian Army is adopting United States type equipment and its needs are being met by purchase in the United States and manufacture in Canada.) Stocks of United Kingdom types in Canada will provide nearly all the armament for four infantry divisions. General Eisenhower has reported that "the most immediate need of Europe is munitions and equipment."

Equipment will be secured to permit the rapid expansion, in the event of war, of the Canadian forces. The aim is to have available as soon as possible whatever is required for all the expanded services during the first year of a war.

4. Navy: The active strength of the Navy will be doubled and nearly 100 ships together with many small craft will be manned to carry out the Canadian share under NATO planning of North Atlantic defense. For this duty ships of the latest types are now under construction and others in commission or in reserve are to be rearmed and refitted.

The defenses of vital harbors are to be completed with modern equipment, and the shipbuilding industry is to be made ready for rapid expansion.

5. Manpower and production: Under the program the strength of the active forces will be increased by nearly 70 percent to 115,000 active service personnel and 33,000 civilians. The active forces in being and planned are sufficient to carry out the agreed role of Canada under the North Atlantic Treaty.

Canada is already producing some new equipment for allied countries, and as standard designs are approved and shortages determined by NATO the production of equipment beyond Canadian needs will be greatly expanded.

6. Comparative figures on population and income: According to the latest available figures, the population of Canada is about one-eleventh that of the United States and the Canadian national income is about one-eighteenth or one-nineteenth that of this country. It is plain, therefore, that Canada is not dragging its feet.

7. Canadian contributions in Korea: To assist the United Nations forces in Korea Canada sent three destroyers and they have given a good account of themselves. They are being successively replaced by other destroyers.

The Four Hundred and Twenty-sixth Heavy Transport Squadron gave great assistance in the arduous airlift to the Far East.

The Canadian Army enlisted 10,000 men for an 18 months' term for the special purpose of carrying out any undertaking by Canada under the Charter of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty. With 900 men posted from the regular active force they form the Canadian Army special force. Appropriate arrangements will be made for officers and men who wish to do so to become part of the regular force.

One unit of the special force, the Second Battalion of the Princess Patricias, is in Korea. The remainder of the special force is continuing its training at Fort Lewis and will be available for service where required.

RECENT CHANGES IN FOOD PRICES

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I wish to submit in behalf of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a preliminary statement on the subject of recent rises in food prices relating to beef and a few canned commodities. I ask unanimous consent to be granted 2 minutes in which to read a few extracts from the statement and to comment thereon for the benefit of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ELLENDER. With reference to beef prices:

Current retail prices of the important cuts of beef are higher in relation to either wholesale beef sides or to live-cattle prices than a year earlier. Between the latter part of January 1950 and the latter part of January 1951 the price of Good grade (now called Choice) beef steers at Chicago increased from $30 to $35 per 100 pounds, or 17 percent. During the same period the wholesale price of comparable carcass beef increased 20 percent and the average price of several retail cuts increased 31 percent in the Washington area and 26 percent in eight representative cities.

The spread between the wholesale price of carcass beef and the average of these retail cuts increased 46 percent in the Washington area and 38 percent in the eight representative cities. Preliminary data based on eight cities indicate that the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar spent for beef dropped to 71 cents in January 1951 as compared with 75 cents in January 1950.

I would like to call your particular attention to the table attached to the statement entitled "Prices of Live Steers, Carcass Beef, and Selected Cuts January 1950 and January 1951." It will be noted that the spread between the prices of carcass and various cuts ranges from 21 percent to as high as 140 percent in the city of Washington, and in the eight selected cities, from 16 percent to 89 percent.

With respect to a few processed commodities, such as canned peaches:

Processors reporting to the committee paid farmers 40 cents more in 1950 for the peaches in a case of 24 No. 2½ cans than in 1949. In contrast to this increase of 40 cents per case going to growers, processors in January 1951 were selling their peaches at $1.20 to $1.50 more per case than in May 1950.

Growers of canning tomatoes received approximately the same prices in 1950 as in 1949 from the processors reporting to the committee. The processors are now selling their popular-priced brands of tomatoes around 80 cents a case, or 25 percent higher than in May 1950. Prices of their higher-priced lines of canned tomatoes also have been raised around 25 percent.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire statement printed in full at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT FROM THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY ON RECENT CHANGES IN FOOD PRICES

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is concerned about recent advances in food prices and statements which have appeared in the press blaming farmers for these increases.

Many of the farm products were already sold by farmers before the price increases occurred. In fact, in a number of cases farmers received lower prices for their products in 1950 than in 1949 even though these products are now selling at sharply higher retail prices.

With this in mind, Chairman ELLENDER, of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, by and with the consent of the committee, about 3 weeks ago requested several large representative processors of canned fruits and vegetables to report prices paid to growers in 1949 and 1950 for their products. Information on inventories, sales, and selling prices covering the period May 1950 through January 1951 was also requested.

Comparable information was obtained from several retail food chains. Similar information was also obtained on beef prices in the Washington area.

The processors and retailers have complied fully with the requests of the committee and made available a large amount of unusually timely and valuable information on food price changes.

BEEF PRICE CHANGES

Current retail prices of the important cuts of beef are higher in relation to either wholesale beef sides or to live cattle prices than a year earlier. Between the latter part of January 1950 and the latter part of January 1951 the price of Good grade (now called Choice) beef steers at Chicago increased from $30 to $35 per 100 pounds, or 17 percent. The spread between the wholesale price of carcass beef and the average of these retail cuts increased 46 percent in the Washington area and 38 percent in the eight representative cities. Preliminary data based on eight cities indicate that the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar spent for beef dropped to 71 cents in January 1951 as compared with 75 cents in January 1950. The detailed price data are shown below.

PROCESSORS' PRICES FOR CANNED PEACHES

Processors reporting to the committee paid farmers 40 cents more in 1950 for the peaches in a case of 24 No. 2½ cans than in 1949. In contrast to this increase of 40 cents per case going to growers, processors in January 1951 were selling their peaches at $1.20 to $1.50 more per case than in May 1950.

PROCESSORS' PRICES FOR CANNED VEGETABLES

Growers of canning tomatoes received approximately the same prices in 1950 as in 1949 from the processors reporting to the committee. The processors are now selling their popular-priced brands of tomatoes around 80 cents a case, or 25 percent higher than in May 1950. Prices of their higher-priced lines of canned tomatoes also have been raised around 25 percent.

Pea growers received slightly lower returns per case for their products in 1950 than a year earlier, although there were substantial differences among the reports. Processors' selling prices of canned peas varied from no change between May of 1950 and January of 1951 to increases of 10 percent.

Corn producers in 1950 received from 4 to 19 cents less per case for their product than they received a year earlier from the reporting processors. The prices on canned corn in January 1951, nevertheless, were 35 to 80 cents per case higher than in May 1950.

Producers of green snap beans for canning received 10 to 15 percent lower returns per case in 1950 than a year earlier with most processors reporting no change in prices between May 1950 and January 1951.

These data show that all of the recent retail price increases are not the result of higher farm prices. The committee is not taking any position at this time regarding the reasonableness of the price changes reported. It is continuing its investigation, especially of the retail price changes in recent weeks.

It will be the purpose of the committee to continue this investigation without fanfare and in the hope that all of the facts can be submitted without bias or prejudice.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I invite Senators to make such suggestions as in their opinion will assist the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in bringing to light the true facts in regard to who is getting what, as between the farmers on the one hand, and those who handle farm products on the other hand. It is our purpose to present all the facts and let the chips fall where they may.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN NATIONAL DEFENSE ACTIVITIES IN ALASKA—LETTER FROM HON. FRANK P. GRAHAM

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, last November the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] directed the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and myself to visit Alaska and to report to the full Armed Services Committee in regard to various phases of the national defense. Upon our return, and in making our report, we realized that there was one phase of our report not then complete, namely, that dealing with labor-management relations. So, with the assistance of the Secretary of the Interior and officials of other Government agencies, a further hearing was held in Alaska. That hearing was moderated by our former colleague from North Carolina, the Honorable Frank P. Graham. He has made to me, as chairman of the subcommittee, a report, in the nature of a personal letter, on the work of the subcommittee. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., February 19, 1951.
Senator LESTER C. HUNT,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LESTER HUNT: I thank you for your letter. I will share its deeply appreciated and generous sentiments with our team. We were glad to try to do our little bit for our country, for Chairman LYNDON JOHNSON and your alert subcommittee, for the departments and agencies involved, and for the unions and contractors in their collective bargaining, which was our main job.

We deeply appreciate the fact that, after clearing some hurdles and straightening out some misunderstandings, we had the cooperation of the unions and the contractors and the good will of the government and the people of Alaska. Without the alertness of Chairman LYNDON JOHNSON and the Hunt-Morse-Saltonstall task force, which went to Alaska last summer, there wouldn't have been any such conference at all. For your Senate committee, Colonel Chambers kept his militant marine breath blowing hot down the backs of the Federal agencies and the Interdepartmental Committee in Washington, which consequently prepared the way and did a good job.

The Interdepartmental Committee in Washington was composed as follows: Departments of the Interior, Labor, Defense, Agriculture, and Commerce, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, the Bureau of the Budget, the National Security Resources Board, the Federal Security Agency, the Economic Stabilization Agency, and the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

In Alaska we had to disabuse the minds of the parties of an almost subconscious fear that Uncle Sam was coming up to Alaska to push 'em around and to tell 'em in a dictatorial way what was what or else. Along with this, there was anticipation on the part of some that with flag waving we might try to pressure them into hurried, unwise, and unfair settlements; also, there was some concern on the part of some union leaders that the Alaska conference would unwisely try to anticipate the Miami conference in the policy making of the building trades for the Nation. You will recall that the national building-trades unions were in conference at Miami at the same time. Some outside observers thought that our mission was premature and, therefore, doomed to failure because it seemed to be a case of the tail trying to wag the dog; also, there was the danger, in view of the probable coming wage-price freeze, that management might simply sit down, do nothing, and wait for the national freeze and the Federal policy to take over. The shortage of skilled labor for the large construction program constituted a problem. The higher cost of living in Alaska, the woeful lack of housing for families, the difficulties of moving workers to a frontier area for the construction season, and the rigors of camp life in isolated sections added to the problems of both management and labor regarding recruitment and wages. These are the things we sized up early as part of the problems that had to be surmounted psychologically and otherwise before we would be able to get fairly inside the minds and hearts of the parties most directly involved.

It was, therefore, important that the opening meeting have the right keynote, dispel fears and misunderstandings, and win confidence. Also it was important that, without unintelligent pressures, we develop consciousness of our common cause in Alaska, in America, and in the free world and reenforce a patriotic determination to reach agreements through voluntary collective bargaining and enhance pride in a great construction program in one of the most strategic areas for the defense of freedom in the world.

In the preliminary meetings of the members of our delegation we hoped that there would develop a team consciousness and a high morale for the job to be done. The morning and evening sessions of the team were held daily as clearinghouses of criticisms, suggestions, anticipation of pitfalls, loose ends, misinformation, misunderstandings, next moves, right approaches to leaders on both sides, and personal follow-ups. We couldn't have asked for a better team, including representatives of your committee, the armed services, the Washington departments, and the Seattle and Alaskan agencies. Without their cooperative teamwork (for which I wish to express deep gratitude) our mission would not have received the welcome and help in Alaska which it did. I wish at this point to say that you, Morse, Saltonstall, and Colonel Chambers had prepared the way with your understanding and your backing of our team at all times.

The Department of the Interior as the responsible Federal Department in the Alaskan situation, the Department of Labor with its special interest, the Conciliation Service with its continuing responsibility, and the Department of Defense, the armed services, and the Corps of Engineers, with their most strategic relation to the whole enterprise, cooperated at every point with their inside information and patriotic devotion. Governor Gruening and his representatives were hospitable, understanding, and helpful at all times. Mr. Edwin Fitch, personal representative of the Secretary of the Interior, was our most capable secretary.

It was important that we have the conference opened with the right Alaskan background and good will. Through the good offices of Henry Benson, Territorial Labor Commissioner, I called on Federal Judge A. J. Diamond, one of the most respected citizens of all Alaska, and asked him to give the Alaskan address of welcome. Mr. Joe Flakne, director of the Alaska division of the Office of Territories of the United States Department of the Interior, fittingly opened the meeting and gladly introduced Judge Diamond. Excepting his two generous references to the conference chairman, Judge Diamond did his part with just the right ideas, tone, words, and hopes. Gen. George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense, sent, through the chairman, a most timely message of encouragement.

Lt. Gen. William E. Kepner, commander in chief of all the armed services in Alaska; his associates, Maj. Gen. J. W. Cunningham, Maj. Gen. W. D. Old, Admiral C. F. Sprague, Brig. Gen. Richard Prather, who, as personal representative of Lieutenant General Kepner, was available at all times with his good offices as liaison between the Armed Forces and our delegation, and Col. Lyle E. Seeman, of the Corps of Engineers, all entered into the spirit of the meeting in a highly intelligent way. They made good talks, to the point and in the right spirit. Col. Justice Chambers, who had told me he was under advice not to take a definite part in the proceedings, yielded to our insistence and made one of the best keynote talks. My introduction of him gave me a chance to tell of his heroism as a regimental leader of the marines in the Pacific from Gudalcanal to valiant landings on successive Pacific island groups, including his extraordinary heroism on Iwo Jima, Saipan, and Tinian. The members of the conference had a chance to see in the flesh a Congressional Medal of Honor man. Fitting talks were made by Col. John R. Noyes, Alaskan road commissioner; Col. J. P. Johnson, manager for the Department of the Interior of the Alaska Railroad; John D. Argetsinger, district engineer, Alaska Public Work; A. W. Blackerly, representing the United States Department of Agriculture; Mr. Charles Straub, special assistant to the Secretary of Labor; and Mr. Henry Gomperts, associate director, OILA, who announced an immediate BLS comparative study of living costs in Seattle, Anchorage, and Fairbanks.

We tried to impress upon the unions and contractors that it was their conference rather than ours, that the responsibility was upon them to reach agreements and that the agreements should carry forward or include provisions and procedures against strikes, slow-downs, lock-outs, and stoppages. We took the time during the first afternoon and the second morning to have each side, in open meeting and then in private sessions, to get off their chests all their sense of grievances, wrongs, and misunderstandings, and also to make constructive suggestions for meeting the problems and the situation in Alaska for an uninterrupted season of defense construction at a critical time in a strategic area.

Realizing that part of the heavy losses (from a third to a half of the season) in defense construction last year were due to failure to come to early agreements, we asked for agreements early in the week's sessions. We made clear that there was no intention of trying to set the national policy or of anticipating the building trades conference in Miami, or of misusing the impending national policy regarding prices and wages. We kept emphasizing that the critical times and the strategic place made imperative the prompt negotiations of agreements with provisions and procedures against strikes and stoppages during the ensuing year. During the second morning's session the parties did what we hoped they would do and what the two representatives of the Labor Department suggested. Spokesmen for labor and management eagerly expressed the desire to go into immediate collective bargaining with the clearly stated patriotic determination to reach prompt agreements and to provide provisions and procedures against strikes, lock-outs, stoppages, and slow-downs.

In order to make it clear that we wanted to be absolutely fair, when we learned that one side, through some channels or another, had advance information of a particular development, we immediately, through members of our team, made that information available to the other side. We had the leading spokesmen for the two sides, for example, talk directly on long distance telephone to the Secretary of Labor so each could hear, not simply through me, but at first hand the developments then underway in Washington. In order to be abreast as far as possible of developments in Miami we reached Dan Tracy over the long distance telephone and had him talk directly to leaders. The parties came to know that we wanted both sides to have equal access to any information we had, both sides to receive equal treatment, and both sides to have complete freedom, within the limits of national security and the urgencies of national defense, in working out their own agreements through voluntary collective bargaining. One of the hazards of the conference was the fact that the plumbers union had last year won a wage scale that was considered by many Alaskans to be out of line and which, if adopted as the Alaskan pattern, would, it was feared, unstabilize the whole Alaskan economy. Another danger was in the relations of the electrical unions and the electrical contractors, which, though on a personal basis most friendly, yet in collective bargaining had reached an impasse with both sides holding adamant positions.

I met with the able spokesman for the electrical union, Mr. H. W. Newcombe, and for the electrical contractors, Mr. J. B. Majerus, in my room on Wednesday, January 24. All matters had been or were agreed upon except wages. The different positions with regard to wages were referred, under the contract, to their National Industrial Council permanently set up by the two parties. An agreement was that day, Wednesday, January 24, reached on this point as follows: that both sides would accept as final and binding the decision of the national council as of January 1, 1951. This was, therefore, a complete agreement which did not require further meetings or bargaining of the parties. The able spokesman for the general contractors, Mr. Everett Dunn, and the able spokesman for the basic building trades union, Mr. Louis C. Berman, Jr., reported to me that on January 25 they had all reached agreements on all points and had included provisions and procedures against strikes, lock-outs, slow-downs, and stoppages of work for the year 1951. The wage increases averaged approximately 10 percent. Our concern that there be procedures against work stoppages in case agreements were not reached, was met by the fact that agreements were promptly reached.

This Alaskan conference, we hope, has set a pattern for future labor-management relations in Alaska:

(1) The collective bargaining was completed for the first time in Alaska instead of in Seattle. Too much had Alaska become an economic appendage in finance, wholesaling, and industrial relations.

(2) Practically all the building trades and unions participated in the conference and reached binding agreements at the same time.

(3) The agreements are continuing agreements and can be reopened or amended at the end of the year 1951 on the basis of their being continuing in nature.

(4) Negotiations did not drag on beyond the time of the expiration of current agreements in March but were consummated almost 2 months in advance of their expiration, with provisions against strikes and stoppages. They thus contributed to mutual understanding, to a spirit of cooperation, and to a patriotic determination to make the next season the greatest season of defense construction in the history of Alaska.

I wish to acknowledge our appreciation of the fine cooperation of public officials in Alaska, of the newspapers, the Daily News, edited by Mr. Norman P. Brown, and the Anchorage Daily Times, edited by Mr. Robert Atwood, the radio station KENI for the generous use of its auditorium, the Westward and Anchorage Hotels, and the people of Anchorage in particular, and of Alaska in general.

I think it would be fitting for Chairman LYNDON JOHNSON and you for the Hunt-Morse-Saltonstall subcommittee to express your appreciation to Oscar Chapman, who took the responsibility of calling the conference as Secretary of the Department of the Interior (Secretary Chapman's department bore the financial burden of the conference and supplied our most efficient executive secretary, Edwin Fitch and Director Flakne and Administrative Officer D. H. Nucker of the Office of Territories), to Secretary Morris Tobin of the Department of Labor for his understanding and cooperation at all times and for his wise and able special representatives, Judge Charles Straub and Henry Gomperts; to Cyrus Ching, United States Director of Conciliation Service and his alert and veteran representatives, Alvin Peterson and Louis Ziman out of the Seattle office; to Leonard Evans, Territorial representative of the Department of Labor, and Henry Benson, Labor Commissioner of Alaska, both of whom gave us much local background and information; and to Secretary Marshall, and through him to the commanding generals of the Armed Forces in Alaska, and to Col. Carl E. Welshner from the Pentagon, who had efficient charge of our Army plane; to Paul Sutton, FHA; to Al White, Housing and Home Finance Agency; to the officers of the Army who met us at St. Louis, Cheyenne, Great Falls, and Anchorage, and especially to the colonel at Great Falls, who outfitted us for the rigors of Alaska; and to Governor Gruening, the wise and able Governor of Alaska and his associates, the gracious Mrs. Gruening, and Governor Gruening's energetic aide, Commander Edward Chester. All of these agencies and persons generously contributed with their knowledge, wisdom, experience, and teamwork to the purpose of this mission.

In letters of appreciation to these departments and agencies it would be well to also thank members of the Interdepartmental Committee and your own Colonel Chambers for arranging the prompt preliminary steps for setting up the conference. With the alertness and foresight of your committee, with the preparation of the Interdepartmental Committee and with the cooperation of all the appropriate agencies in Washington, Seattle, and Alaska, and especially with the cooperation, good will, and patriotic determination of the contractors and the unions, our mission, we trust, has achieved some of the purposes which Chairman JOHNSON and your committees and the departments involved had in mind in urging that the mission be sent to Alaska. The undertaking had the nature of an adventure for which all participating had real zest and joy in a rich experience in trying to serve our country. Please express my best wishes to LYNDON JOHNSON, WAYNE MORSE, LEVERETT SALTONSTALL, and, of course, accept them for yourself, as my friendly one-time, next-seat neighbor in the United States Senate.

When WAYNE MORSE for the committee called me to go, I knew there was no saying "No" to such a determined man. With a half day of briefing by the interdepartmental committee we were in the air on the way to Alaska 12 hours ahead of schedule.

Always sincerely,

FRANK P. GRAHAM,
Chairman of the Conference.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—STATEMENT BY GEN. GEORGE C. MARSHALL

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, on February 1, the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] for himself and 25 other Senators, introduced Senate Joint Resolution 27 to authorize the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway project. It is my pleasure to be associated with that enterprise as a cosponsor.

The House Public Works Committee is holding hearings at present. This morning the Secretary of Defense, George Marshall, testified that it is of the utmost importance to the mobilization program to undertake this project immediately. General Marshall spoke both for the Department of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is important that Members of Congress promptly have available the Secretary's views on this subject, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the brief text of Secretary Marshall's statement.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT—STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF DEFENSE GENERAL MARSHALL BEFORE THE PUBLIC WORKS COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1951

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen, the Department of Defense, including the Joint Chiefs of Staff, supports the House joint resolution now before your committee which would permit implementation of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project and recommends its adoption by the Congress.

Our support is based on the advantages to national defense that this project offers.

First, the seaway, when completed, will increase the flow of high grade iron ore for the production of steel for munitions and other purposes from the Labrador-Quebec area which is now being developed. Unless the seaway is built, obtaining ore from this new source will present serious problems of transportation including the hazards of wartime sea transportation. On the other hand, the accessibility of the Labrador-Quebec area made possible by the seaway would supplement our present supply and would furnish a substantial additional source if our present primary source should be seriously reduced. Freedom from submarine attack does not, of course, mean full security. The risk of interruption of the new seaway by enemy sabotage must be faced. The danger of sabotage, however, is already of critical importance at the locks at Sault Ste. Marie, through which our Lake Superior ores are brought in such vast quantity. Until the seaway is built, almost the whole of our iron ore supply is subject to interruptions by a single act of sabotage there.

Second, the power project in connection with the seaway will provide additional sources of cheap and independent power so necessary, especially in the case of an all-out mobilization.

Third, the seaway will facilitate the transportation of munitions to overseas bases. Moreover, in case of atomic attack, transportation could be diverted from one city to another. It is realized that the seaway will be closed for months every year because of ice conditions but that is equally true of the present Great Lakes transportation route from the Mesabi Range to which all interested parties have successfully adjusted their operations.

Fourth, the seaway will afford access to additional shipbuilding and repairing facilities always very necessary in time of war to the maintenance of our supremacy on the high seas.

Finally, it should increase the capabilities of mutual defense between Canada and the United States.

I have brought with me Mr. Small, Chairman of the Munitions Board, who can explain in some detail the industrial mobilization aspects of the project.

For the record, I want to add that the project has had the approval of the Department of Defense in the past and that I supported it before a committee of Congress as Secretary of State.

We are still in the fortunate position of being able to buy time insofar as this project is concerned. We have not yet run short of iron ore in continental United States. Our annual supply from the Lake Superior region is declining, however, in a period when our requirements are mounting rapidly. We must have other sources readily available. It is urgent that this project be begun promptly, so that by the time we must depend heavily on foreign sources of ore supply it will be ready.

I SPEAK FOR DEMOCRACY—PRIZE-WINNING ESSAY BY MISS NORITA NEWBROUGH

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the Voice of Democracy, which is sponsored by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Broadcasters, and the Radio Television Manufacturers Association, and is endorsed by the United States Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, this year conducted a college scholarship contest among high school students throughout the Nation. I have before me the essays of four of the winners in that contest. One of the winners is a very charming young lady from my own State, Miss Norita Newbrough, age 16, of Baton Rouge, La., who is attending the Baton Rouge High School. I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks there may be embodied in the body of the RECORD her essay entitled "I Speak for Democracy."

There being no objection, the essay was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I SPEAK FOR DEMOCRACY

(By Norita Newbrough, age 16, Baton Rouge High School, Baton Rouge, La.)

I speak for democracy. I have no franchise yet, no voice in who shall make the laws, or what those laws shall be, still, democracy and I have been acquainted for some time now. Very early, since before we learned to walk, all of us were learning those fundamental things which democracy is based on. We stumbled upward from our first ideas to others, always adding to our knowledge about the democratic way of life. Sometimes, acquiring that knowledge was painful.

In the home, we saw how decisions are arrived at by a majority vote, and that even if sometimes we do get stuck because we are in the minority, we have to swallow our protests and abide by the wish of the largest number of people, if we want others to respect our voice. You see, we first learn tolerance of views opposite ours when we come to recognize the fact that the man who stands against us is every inch as tall, and counts as much, as the man who stands with us. The key phrase in understanding democracy then, is understanding and respecting the individual.

Few of us have ever lived in a totalitarian state. But we have all seen the Nazi, and the Fascist, and the Bolshevist, manifested in the emotional attitudes of individuals we have known in our home, school, and civic circles. Those are the people who haven't learned their social lessons well. They are immature in essentially the same way that Communist states and Fascist states are immature. The Fascist you and I know is the boy who overvalues himself and undervalues his companions, who hasn't yet learned the awful consequences involved when he trifles with the rights of others. The ability to live democratically is the big test of an individual's maturity.

Ever since time immemorial, wise men have stressed the word individual. God Himself has made it pretty clear what He thinks of the individual. Men have talked about His importance, and now we are talking about it again very loudly today till sometimes some of us think that perhaps we have overdone our eloquence. Yet look what has happened in countries where the individual has been underplayed. Look at the men who are willing to sell individual rights for a song about a party. Look behind into the history of the countries, and find out why those men think the way they do—study the social and economic conditions which fostered their criminal unconcern.

There are some people who say we are headed toward a totalitarian state. They say that democracy, as we know it, will give way to socialism, as it exists in England, then to communism, as we see it today in Soviet Russia. They say that government, all government, must move in that cycle. Now maybe I'm wrong, but it seems to me we learn from history that only slavery makes anarchists of men, and that anarchists eventually enslave themselves. There we see a cycle of political mistakes, one following, of necessity, on the wake of the other. But is democracy a political mistake? Really free people, free in the truest sense of the word, freely adhering to principle, and therefore free from the consequences of license, people like that can never be slaves, and can never be anarchists. So there goes your cycle.

The leaders of today have said over and over again, that we, the youth of America, are the architects who will inherit the job of building a better America. Lately we have been told that the responsibility of building a better world is ours also to shoulder. So now that we know what we're out to build, let's consider the different ground plans—communism and slavery on the one hand, democracy, and freedom on the other. Then, with the tools God has given us, let's make our world a democracy.

RENEGOTIATION ACT OF 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1724) to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the time between now and 1:30 p. m. is to be equally divided, to be controlled by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in the portion of the time which I shall use, which will be not more than 1 minute at this time, I am sending to the desk an amendment which does not directly affect the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois; but I send the amendment to the desk at this time, and now state that I shall offer it as soon as it is in order to do so.

This amendment prohibits the Board from delegating its authority to grant permissive exemptions. The prohibition is outright. The Senate Finance Committee amendment prevents this power from being delegated to procurement officers, but the power could be delegated to an agency of the Government, as defined in the bill, which agency could, in turn, delegate such power to a person other than a procurement officer. While I believe the bill will establish adequate protection against abuse of delegation by taking this power out of the hands of procurement officers, since some question has arisen on this point, and in order to make the bill more agreeable to the committee itself, I shall offer the amendment, which will permit this power to be exercised only by the Board.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield only for a question, because I am sure all Senators realize that the time now is limited.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator yield for a question on the subject of exemptions, a matter which is very important to those who reside in my State?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia a question based on a telegram which was received this morning from the Boston Wool Trade Association.

On page 28 of the bill, under mandatory exemptions, subparagraph (2), which is the agricultural paragraph, I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee if an exemption for "an agricultural commodity in its raw or natural state" includes ginned cotton and scoured wool?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe the Senator is referring to the mandatory exemptions. The amendment before the Senate relates to permissive exemptions. So, we can discuss that subject at a later time. However, I do not think scoured wool will be exempt under the mandatory exemption. It was not exempted under the World War II statute.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield to the distinguished junior Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. As nearly as I can understand from the explanation which has been made—and I wish to be sure about this matter—I believe that the amendment now referred to will completely reserve to the Board itself the authority to grant permissive exemptions. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly correct; it prohibits the Board from delegating that power. The power must be exercised only by the Board itself.

Mr. CASE. I am very glad to hear that, because, as the Senator may recall, that was one question which I raised the other day in regard to the powers of the Board.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite correct, and I have attempted to meet the very pertinent point the Senator raised in that connection, in order to improve the bill.

Mr. President, I now yield the floor, unless there are further questions.

Mr. FERGUSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan in the time of the Senator from Georgia? The time between now and 1:30, the Chair will say to the Senator from Michigan, is under the control of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that the Senator from Illinois has requested the Senator from Michigan to proceed in his stead.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct. Therefore, I wish to proceed now, in the time of the Senator from Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Illinois is busily engaged in a committee which he cannot leave at the moment; and he has yielded 10 minutes, at the present time, to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, the Chairman of the Finance Committee has today sent to the desk an amendment which would preclude the board from delegating its powers of permissive exemption. In my opinion that would help the bill somewhat. As the bill now stands the authority for permissive exemptions can be delegated and redelegated until some minor employee emerges with the power. It might not be so bad if a contracting officer could have that delegated authority, because it may be said that he could use it to drive a better bargain in the original negotiations. But under the terms of the bill a contracting officer cannot receive the delegated power, although almost anyone else can. And when we get to such a broad use of the power of permissive exemptions we open the door to the temptation, the pressure, and the favoritism that are the evils behind discretionary authority.

But, Mr. President, that improvement will not cure the defect in the bill which we are attacking in the motion to eliminate entirely the powers of permissive exemption.

As I view this problem and the theory of renegotiation, it is inaccurate to speak of contract renegotiations. That is not entirely correct. What we are talking about here is a renegotiation of profits and losses under a contract. Ordinarily, in America, we are all opposed to the fixing of profits. I certainly am. It is a step toward statism, when we move toward the fixing of profits. We understand that there are certain ideologies which do not favor profits, and under normal conditions profit fixing is no more than a furtherance of those ideologies.

But these are not normal conditions. We are in a state of emergency. We are letting Government contracts of many, many billions of dollars. In this state of emergency we have embarked upon a program of fixing prices, and fixing quotas; as a result we find ourselves in the position, in a way, of having outlawed the individual-enterprise system in America. We declare an emergency, and we in effect outlaw the individual enterprise system. At least we hog-tie it. because real competition is stifled. Once we start on the road of controls, we find ourselves in the position we occupy today.

The question then is, How are exemptions to be provided? I think we need certain controls, for if we say to a man who is in business, "We will provide you with the machinery, we will allow you to have the necessary tools, and therefore you will be able to make this product," and say to another man, "You cannot have the tools, you cannot make this article, because it is necessary for us to have controls," controls breed controls, and renegotiation is a necessary consequence of the circumstances.

The situation, in brief, is that under emergency conditions we have abandoned the automatic disciplines of our pricing system under free enterprise. Competitive bidding is impossible. The Government cannot say to a concern: "I don't like your price. I'll take my business across the street." It cannot say this because there is no place of business across the street free to make an offer. It is subjected to controls. Whatever tools of production it has are needed for another job.

So it is that the Government has to make its contracts on a negotiated basis. The urgency of the Government's requirements prevents it from shopping around. The same urgency does not permit satisfactory price arrangements. Possibilities of excessive profits in a noncompetitive situation of that sort are obvious. Thus we go to a policy of renegotiation. The theory of renegotiation is that no one shall make an exorbitant profit out of Government contracts awarded in these circumstances of urgency and emergency.

Having adopted the theory of renegotiation—and I am one who has done so, however reluctantly and however regretfully, the question is whether there shall be exemptions.

In a renegotiation of profits it seems to me that when the first step is taken and the theory of profit limitations through renegotiation is adopted, exemptions should not be allowed. Once exemptions are allowed, there is a breaking down of the rule originally conceived of as necessary in order to control profits. If there is to be renegotiation, then the only thing to do is renegotiate, straight across the board.

If the new amendment offered by the chairman of the committee should be agreed by the Senate, only the board could allow an exemption from renegotiation, except as to exemptions which have already been provided and fixed in the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator will recall that on Monday the Senate adopted an amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas

[Mr. McCLELLAN] providing that no contracts shall be renegotiated unless they have a direct and immediate effect upon the defense effort.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to have the Senator explain to the Senate how the Board could operate under this bill in view of the provision that a contract must have an immediate and direct effect upon the defense effort. That includes housing, which is named in the bill. It includes a synthetic-rubber plant, all of whose products may go into civilian use, and it includes all hydroelectric plants and things of that kind which are now in process of building. All those come under this bill. It must be determined that a contract has an immediate effect on the defense effort, and at the same time it is necessary for the Board to go into all the minor details. When it is thought unnecessary or not feasible to renegotiate, without the Douglas amendment that determination could be made. But I should like to have the Senator tell us how in the world a board is going to renegotiate more than $50,000,000,000 worth of Government contracts a year, with this limitation, on the one hand, and with its hands tied by the Douglas amendment, on the other.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think we come down to this proposition: the objection of the junior Senator from Virginia is that the total amount of contracts is beyond the capacity of man to renegotiate. The Senator says that $50,000,000,000 is so large a sum that it is impossible to renegotiate the contracts. I start with the premise that the sum of $50,000,000,000, which is involved in the letting of the contracts, is so vast as to be almost beyond the power of the human mind to contemplate. I, therefore, think and I stress that it should not be within the power of a group of men to let such enormous contracts unless there is to be a renegotiation. By renegotiation it is contemplated that there will be a checking up after the fact upon what a contract officer has done, when he had neither the time nor the capacity to obtain competing bids, as a result of certain controls. I conclude that all contracts should be renegotiated in the future if the public interests are to be best served.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The position of the junior Senator from Virginia, as he stated on this floor last August, and as he again stated last Monday, is that the key to this situation is an independent board composed of the finest, ablest men who can be found, men who have a sense of patriotism and of public duty, and who would be willing to serve at a personal sacrifice in the emergency. The junior Senator from Virginia thinks the Senate made a mistake in agreeing to a modification of the House language regarding the independent board, assuming that we would get the kind of men I have referred to. Certainly we ought to have men of that type.

If we got that kind of board, we certainly would not want them to be placed in the impossible position of determining what is an immediate and direct defense activity and what is not; neither would we want to tie their hands regarding numerous unnecessary details, where sound judgment can eliminate them and give them an opportunity to concentrate on the big work. The Senator will recall that in the last war a board—not the kind of board I am proposing now—saved us $10,000,000 by contract renegotiation, and possibly much more than that, in an indirect way, from the repricing work it did.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator meant $10,000,000,000, I believe.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I meant to say $10,000,000,000. I notice that in the RECORD for Monday I was quoted as saying "million," though I thought I had said "billion" then. But perhaps the Official Reporter was correct. If I have made the same mistake twice, please let me emphasize that it is billions. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I sympathize with the view that, after all, it is going to be a practical impossibility for the Board to determine what is a defense contract and what is not a defense contract. However, I do not see how it makes any difference at all, in the case of a contract for a dam or an airport, whether it is directly connected with the defense or is not. The basic fact is that the Federal Government is spending a vast amount of money under abnormal conditions. We have so many controls that competitive free enterprise to a large extent has been eliminated. As a result the Government cannot negotiate its contracts on a competitive basis to eliminate excessive profits. Therefore we must have renegotiation of profits. That is the theory of renegotiation, and that is what this bill is intended to provide.

Once we adopt that theory of renegotiation, then we should renegotiate across the board. That is what I have tried to say heretofore on the floor in contending that there should be neither mandatory nor permissive exemptions. I think all contracts ought to be renegotiated in such a period as this. I contend further the limit should not be fixed at $500,000. It is too high.

I am particularly opposed to permissive exemptions, because we shall find that there will be, and there cannot help but be, claims of favoritism, a thing which breaks down the public morale when the Government comes to contract for goods and services. We have had an example in the case of the RFC Board, composed of five men; and the men who are to be appointed to the renegotiation board are to be appointed by the same Chief Executive who named the Board of the RFC. The mere fact that a man may be named by the President and approved by the Senate does not indicate that he has the necessary will power to resist temptation.

It should be our endeavor, when we adopt a policy of the renegotiation of profits, to proceed in a way which will not permit favoritism or claims of favoritism. We should, in fact, be seeking to remove all the pressures which may possibly lead to favoritism. Permissive exemptions are an open invitation to pressures.

Short of eliminating permissive exemptions entirely, there is another midway step toward eliminating pressures upon the board. That is, that exemptions are to be granted only by virtue of the class in which the contractors fall, so that those who deal in a certain class of goods would have an exemption, rather than that individuals in particular classes would have exemptions. That would help relieve pressure upon the board for favorable treatment in individual cases.

As a Member of the Senate I assisted in conducting hearings of the War Investigating Committee on World War II experience with renegotiation. We concluded any exemptions were undesirable. We found that profits up to 85 percent occurred in connection with some of the contracts where an exemption was allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The Senator's 10 minutes have expired.

Mr. FERGUSON. Then I yield the floor at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield such time to the Senator from Ohio as he wishes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Ohio would yield to the Senator from Florida to address a question to the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TAFT. On the subject under discussion; yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. If the senior Senator from Georgia would permit, I should like to address a question to him for the RECORD.

In the event the Board, under the permissive exemption now provided in the bill, had the power to exempt, in its discretion, an individual contract or a class of contracts, in the event it were later discovered that fraud had been perpetrated on the Government, would the Board have authority to reassume jurisdiction in such a case?

Mr. GEORGE. Undoubtedly, fraud would always permit the reopening of the agreement. And the bill so provides.

Mr. HOLLAND. But if an actual order is entered by the Board, in its discretion, to exempt a single contract or a class of contracts, and it is later shown, at any stage, that the Board was imposed upon and that fraud was perpetrated, is the Senator clear that the Board would have authority in such a case to recapture complete jurisdiction to handle the matter?

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have only a word to say in opposition to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The matter of renegotiation is an extraordinary remedy. Frankly, I opposed the provision for renegotiation altogether at the beginning of the last war, because it offended every sense of justice, particularly where there was no clause in the contract under consideration providing for it. But the Congress provided that in spite of a written contract, and in spite of provision for compensation expressly written into the contract, after the contract was performed the Government could say to the contractor, "You made too much money. We are going to take part of it away from you, and we will not pay the amount we contracted to pay."

The whole basis of renegotiation was, and is, entirely in the discretion of the Board. There were no principles upon which renegotiation could be based, and so the matter could not have been handled in connection with a tax law of some kind. The whole power of renegotiation is an extraordinary remedy, and the law puts the business people of this country and others completely at the mercy of the Board set-up. There is no question about that. The Board would have practically complete power to say that a company has made excessive profits, and fix the amount of reimbursement.

The only question now is whether the Board can go further, and instead of finding that there are excessive profits, can say, "Here are contracts in connection with which we do not believe there is any serious danger of excessive profits being made, so we will exempt them and save ourselves going into an examination and investigation."

We are confiding no more to the discretion of the Board in giving the power of exemption than we are in the bill giving them power to fix limits of profits the Board desires to fix. Therefore, so far as the danger of dishonesty is concerned, the danger is just as great whether the Board can exempt the companies entirely, or can fix the amount of the excess profits according to its arbitrary discretion.

When we give them power, we must admit there is a possibility of corruption, but we must also assume that those who are appointed and confirmed are honest. We do not afford any remedy against corruption by taking away from the Board the power to provide that certain kinds of contracts need not be renegotiated. Unless we give this power, the enforcement of this law is almost impossible administratively. There are hundreds of thousands of individual contracts of every kind. We have probably exempted the greater number in fixing a limit of $500,000 a year, which may be exempted. But there are still a great many and we would practically be forcing the Board to cover the whole field covered by the purchasing departments in dozens of departments of the Government and go over their contracts again.

I believe that unless the Board did have the power to make exemptions of the kind provided, they would be simply swamped by the tremendous amount of work, and the expenses of the Board would begin to equal the expenses of other departments. It seems to me the right of exemption is necessary unless the Board is to be swamped.

We still have several hundred cases in the Tax Court, which acts as an administrative appeals body. Even with the limitation which existed in the World War Act it is 6 years after the Second World War and hundreds of cases are still unsettled.

Furthermore, this right was given in time of war. We do not at the present moment face war. We face something less than war. We face a period of great governmental contract operation. But I cannot see, in the consideration of the pending amendment, or any other amendment, perhaps, the necessity of making the law stronger than it was made during the Second World War. The provision was made on the theory that contractors should not make profits out of war. That was the basis of it.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I recognize, of course, that no war has been declared, but does not the Senator feel that war is actually under way in Korea?

Mr. TAFT. I do feel that, but it is not a war which entails any change in the economy of this country. As a matter of fact, if the Senator will look into the expenses of the Federal Government, he will find that for the 7 months running from July 1 to February 1, the expenses of the Federal Government amounted to $1,400,000,000 less than for the same 7 months beginning July 1, 1949, and that the only increase is an increase of about a billion dollars in the expenses of the Armed Forces. So that it is obvious that the Korean war has not created an economic situation which particularly affects the Government's economic policy.

There are other provisions in which the House proposed somewhat stricter language than that found in the original law. The Senate committee, in most cases, went back to the provision of the World War Renegotiation Act. That act was well administered; it was possible to administer it, except for the long hangover of cases still pending. But in general it was well administered. It resulted in the recovery of $10,000,000,000 of excess profits, and I see no reason why at the present time we should impose a stricter rule than the rule imposed during World War II.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, it is a pleasure occasionally to disagree with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. With all due regard to the respect which we entertain for him and for his conclusions, as we do for all other Members of the Senate, I am moved in this matter not merely by the studies of our committees, which have been necessarily brief, but by the very extensive investigations of the operation of the renegotiation law during the last war.

The committee of which I was chairman went into the subject extensively. It thoroughly investigated the actual operation of the law. It had the benefit of the views of the gentleman who had been chiefly responsible for its administration, Brig. Gen. Maurice Hirsch, of Houston, Tex. He had the opportunity—I do not know that I should say the distinction—of being educated, with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and myself in the same class at Harvard Law School, where we were also associated with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM].

Mr. President, in this particular matter it seems to me that very great respect may well be accorded to the views of General Hirsch, who came to the subject fresh from a very distinguished legal career. He administered the law, as has been said, to the very great satisfaction of all concerned in what was the Truman War Investigating Committee and the committee which followed its activities later on. The staff was continuously impressed with the very broad understanding which General Hirsch demonstrated of the purpose of the act and of the practicability of its administration. It was the well considered conclusion of General Hirsch, who had administered his powers with practically no criticism, that the one great recommendation which he would make was the elimination of the so-called permissive exemptions. It seems to me that he must have been led to make the recommendation as the result of his intimate experience with the administration of the law, and that it was such experience which persuaded him to recommend that the Board or Administrator be relieved of the pressures which would almost inevitably result.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator from Maine feel that General Hirsch was dealing with the condition which prevailed under the previous law, when exemptions could be granted by the very officers who were letting the contracts? That was the condition under the previous law.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. We have eliminated that condition. Under the pending bill only the Board could grant the exemption. The Board would not be able to do it except by classes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, my time is limited. General Hirsch certainly did not stress any such distinction insofar as my recollection goes, or the reports indicate. He merely felt that it was unwise and undesirable. It seems to me since that time even more persuasive arguments have been made. In spite of the suggestion that the very broad discretion of the Board affords opportunity for it to do almost anything it desires in connection with profits, it seems to me that there is an extraordinary difference between saying to a firm, "We will not even look into your affairs," and looking into them and saying to the concern, "We find and determine that 10, 15, or 20 percent is a proper profit." If we have the benefit of the considered conclusions of the Board as to what is a fair profit, there is very much less danger of excessive abuses arising in the administration of the act.

Former Senator Walsh once said, "If a power is to be denied because it may be abused, government must cease." It is perfectly true that we must guard great powers. However, after the recent revelations of abuses of administrative authority, and when we realize both the power and the influence of the interests which are seeking to pervert great defense activities purely to selfish ends, it seems to me we must preserve all the safeguards we can preserve in the administration of an act such as the one now proposed. I have far less concern with a possible abuse of power to determine profits than I have with the power to exempt from profit. In our investigations we found it was the practice of the Board, while not being limited as to the amount of profits, to apply renegotiation to categories of cases, and with regard to circumstances, on the basis of 10 percent, 12 percent, or 15 percent.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems desirable that the exemptions should be wiped out.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, far be it from me to presume to say anything which would minimize the necessity for and the importance of renegotiation when we are dealing with large defense contracts entered into in a hurry.

What I am about to say I shall say only because of the position which I take on the amendment. Renegotiation was introduced into Federal legislation under an amendment which I offered in the House of Representatives to the sixth supplemental appropriation bill in 1942. It was first applied to the Department of the Secretary of War, the Department of the Secretary of the Navy, and their establishments. Subsequently, I offered an amendment on another bill which extended the provisions to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. When the act was amended in 1943 I appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee to make some suggestions for the improvement of the act, based upon experience which we had had with the act up to that time. The existing renegotiation statute of 1948 stems from the amendment which I offered to the supplemental appropriation bill in the spring of 1948.

I mention this only to illustrate the fact that I want renegotiation to succeed. I do not want it to bog down. I fear that if we eliminate the authority of the Board to exempt a limited area of contracts under the permissive exemption section, we will risk the danger of renegotiation bogging down by causing the Board to examine contracts which it knows, by reason of their terms, present no field in which to operate.

The provision for exemption is limited in this bill. I have no doubt that Senators have quoted Mr. Hirsch correctly but I think he must have had in mind the broad authority of the Secretaries under the old act. I also recall what Mr. Karker and Mr. Dodge, the earlier Administrators of the Price Adjustment Board, said. They all recognized the fact that we were dealing with an extraordinary power, which should be exercised in such a way as to preserve as much as possible free enterprise, and at the same time expedite procurement for the Government in a national emergency.

I do not know whether Mr. Hirsch had the suggestion made to him that the proposed permissive exemptions were a limitation of the broad exemption power which the Secretary had in the prior act. In spite of that fact, there were more than $10,000,000,000 worth of recoveries, as has been pointed out, certainly a worth-while result.

The presently proposed permissive exemption section does not give unlimited authority to the Board to exempt. Only in five areas may it be exercised. The first is contracts or subcontracts to be performed outside the territorial limits of continental United States or Alaska. Senators who are familiar with the problems which arise in connection with construction work in Alaska and in some other places of the world will realize that on certain occasions it is necessary to employ a foreign contractor. I would favor renegotiation of contracts with foreign contractors whenever it seems worth while or can be productive. But it seems to me not unwise to grant to the Board authority to permit exemptions in such cases where it finds that renegotiations would be fruitless or would defeat the possibility of getting the needed job.

The second permissive exemption relates to contracts or subcontract under which, in the opinion of the Board, the profits can be determined with reasonable certainty when the contract price is established.

The third class consists of contracts or subcontracts or performance thereunder during a specified period or periods when, in the opinion of the Board, the provisions of the contract are otherwise adequate to prevent excessive profits. Why should we require the Board to use its personnel to go into that class of contracts, when it has an ample field in which to apply its facilities—namely, to contracts which really need renegotiation?

The fourth class of permissive exemptions consist of those where renegotiation would jeopardize secrecy required in the public interest. Opinion may vary as to whether essential secrecy is involved in a particular case. But the amendment which the Senator from Georgia has said would be offered, to prevent the Board from delegating the power to pass on exemptions should meet the situation. A board whose members would be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate should be competent and trustworthy enough to determine when legitimate security is involved.

The fifth class involves subcontracts in which it is not administratively feasible, in the opinion of the Board, to determine and segregate the profits attributable to such subcontract or group of subcontracts from the profits attributable to activities not subject to renegotiation. In other words, this last provision lets the Board save its energies when examination shows that the Board could not distinguish between profits made from ordinary business and war business. There is real work to do where results can be obtained; the energies of the Board should be free to concentrate in fruitful fields.

Mr. President, under all the circumstances I hope we will permit the Board to operate, and not let it bog down.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Illinois wishes to speak at this time?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, may I ask how much time has been taken by the respective sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has 10 minutes left.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And the opponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has about 10 minutes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to defer to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not mind proceeding at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, obviously 10 minutes does not suffice for a full discussion; but this is, in a sense, a narrow amendment. The motion is to strike the so-called permissive exemption section from the bill. That is the section which merely permits the Board, in its sound discretion, to exempt from renegotiation individual contracts or contracts by classes.

The House wrote these provisions into the bill. It wished to restrict the permissive power of the Board to make exemptions, except for five classes as stated in the bill. The House eliminated certain permission exemptions which were carried in the old law, the wartime act, under which contracts for standard commercial articles could be expressly exempted. The House did not include that provision in its bill. Neither has the Senate included it. The five particular classes of contracts which may be exempted by the Board entirely in its discretion are set forth in subsection (d) of section 106, on pages 34 and 35 of the bill.

Attention has already been called to the fact that the Renegotiation Act itself is an extraordinary act in that it gives to a board the power to undo a solemn contract made by the Government of the United States with one of its citizens. That power is practically absolute. The Board may look at a contractor's profit in his fiscal year and conclude that some are excessive. It makes no difference under what circumstances the contract was made. The Senate should bear in mind that during the execution of the contract the procurement officers of the Government have the right to reprice the very articles which go into the contract. They have the right to redetermine the value of the articles or services. It is only after the contract has been negotiated that the Board which we are now considering in this bill has any jurisdiction. The Board then determines whether the profits under the total contracts of the contractor for the entire fiscal year are in excess of a fair and reasonable profit, or are exorbitant. The Board does not look to a single contract. There is a limitation in the bill on the gross amount which will make renegotiable the profits of any contractor.

As a fundamental principle underlying this matter, it seems to me that we must bear in the very forefront of our minds that we are undertaking by this bill to create a strong and independent Renegotiation Board, vested with broad administrative powers. The appointment of the Board, whether accomplished in the manner provided by the House or in the manner provided by the Finance Committee, is surrounded by such safeguards that we may feel reasonably assured, I believe, that only men of the highest caliber will be appointed to the Board. It would be anomalous to attempt to create a strong Board and at the same time to pin its arms by its sides. We cannot create strength and weakness at the same time. We cannot demand judgment from the Board and deny it discretion. In the opinion of the Finance Committee, it is imperative that the Board be given authority and opportunity to determine within specified areas that renegotiation should not be applied to certain contracts or subcontracts, or to certain classes of contracts or subcontracts, either because renegotiation is not necessary in those cases, or is not administratively feasible, or should not be undertaken because it would not be practical or make good business sense to do so.

I think we may best understand the need for retaining permissive exemption authority in the Board by considering several illustrative cases. Take, for example, a contract entered into by the Air Force for an item to be manufactured by a Swiss contractor. The difficulties of conducting renegotiation in such a situation are fairly evident. It would be difficult and burdensome for the Board to obtain from the Swiss contractor all of the voluminous financial and operating data required for renegotiation and to conduct conferences with executives of the Swiss firm, and, in the event the proceedings resulted in an impasse requiring the issuance of a unilateral determination of excessive profits by the Board, it would be difficult to enforce that order against the Swiss firm by any of the various means provided in the bill. The expense incident to proceedings of this sort would also be a consideration. It would be preferable, it seems to me, if the Board, by the use of its exemption power, could contribute its good offices to bringing about a proper price for such a contract in lieu of undertaking the burdensome and expensive proceedings I have just described.

As another example, consider the case of a consultant employed by one of the departments to render expert personal services, let us say, of a scientific nature, in connection with the defense effort. Such a contract, under the terms of the bill, would be subject to renegotiation, although under the pay scale now permitted by law such a contractor could never aggregate a sufficient amount of money to make him subject to renegotiation for a fiscal year. Unless the Board had the authority to exempt such contracts from renegotiation, the staff of the Board would be put to the trouble and expense of sending the necessary forms to each such individual, and each such individual would be put to the trouble, expense, and irritation of having to fill out the necessary form to indicate that he was not subject to being renegotiated for the year. The power to exempt such contracts is obviously necessary, and if we are to deal fairly with our citizens we certainly ought to entrust his power to the Board.

A further illustration might involve a company which furnishes, as a subcontractor, items of a character which flow freely in trade, for example, nuts, bolts, and other common items. Even at the height of a war such products, when purchased by a contractor from his supplier, are used both in the production of war or defense goods and also in the manufacture of his regular commercial products. It is not always possible, and certainly it is never easy, for a contractor in such circumstances purchasing these items from various suppliers to identify the source of any particular quantity used on a given job. It follows, then, that the suppliers of these items would have difficulty in determining and segregating the profits attributable to his sales for defense purposes from his profits attributable to his sales for nondefense purposes. This problem became very acute during the early administration of the Renegotiation Act of 1948 and imposed great hardship both upon suppliers of such items and upon the renegotiation agencies. The situation was relieved only by the use of the permissive exemption authority contained in that act. Unless similar authority is vested in the Renegotiation Board contemplated by the present bill, there will be no way of alleviating this difficulty in the future.

These few illustrations will serve to indicate generally the type of exemptions which the Board would issue pursuant to the authority contained in the bill. It is not intended or anticipated that the Board will indiscriminately exempt contracts, either with individuals or generally, which would result in an escape of large amounts of excessive profits from renegotiation or in favoritism as between contractors and subcontractors.

So, Mr. President, the committee is strongly against the elimination of this permissive portion of the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, no one can overestimate the importance of the issue which we have before us. The purchases of the Federal Government during the ensuing fiscal year will probably amount to between forty billion and fifty billion dollars, and it is likely that the same annual volume of purchases will continue for years to come. Involved in this issue therefore is the question of whether we will provide proper safeguards to see that excessive profits are not made, and that the American taxpayer is protected.

Mr. President, nothing can do more to destroy morale in a period either of defense mobilization or of war itself, than a contrast between great profits made by the few on the one hand and the hardships suffered by many upon the other. If we are to go into this period of defense preparations and possible eventual war, it is necessary to provide every safeguard to assure that there shall be a substantial equality of sacrifice, and that no particular group in the community shall make excessively large profits—especially at the expense of the Government.

The difficulty which procurement agencies frequently face when they place huge defense and war contracts is that they do not know in advance what the costs will be. In many cases the items which are ordered have not previously been produced, or upon which past experience has been slight. Yet if these agencies wait and draw a contract so carefully as to protect the Government in every conceivable contingency, valuable time will be consumed, production will be delayed, and the preparedness of the country will be diminished.

So the device of renegotiation has been hit upon in order to permit procurement agencies to make contracts which are initially favorable to the suppliers, favorable to the firms which are selling to the Government—liberal contracts as to price, and so forth. Then, if later it develops that the prices are excessive, and the costs have gone down much below what was expected originally, and if the profits prove to be excessive, the contracts can later be renegotiated to permit only a fair and reasonable profit to be made.

The procedure for this, on the basis of the experience in the last war, is that the Renegotiation Board conducts a preliminary audit to see whether or not the gross profits seem to be excessively large. If they do not seem to be too large, then renegotiation is not carried out. But if they do seem to be excessively large, then the Renegotiation Board goes into the circumstances of the particular contract. I think this is probably about as wise a device as we could develop in the very difficult situation in which we are placed.

But the Renegotiation Act can be made worthless by opening up so many exemptions that it will not apply to a sufficient proportion of war contracts. I am very frank to say that I think altogether too many exemptions are made in this measure. There is a wide range of mandatory exemptions which we are not discussing at this time, but, in addition, there is a wide range of permissive exemptions. I should like to call the Senate's attention once again to clause (3), which gives to the Board, prior to production and prior to cost experience, the right to exempt any contract from renegotiation at the time the contract was made or shortly thereafter if in the opinion of the Board ample provision was made to protect the Government.

The Board cannot tell in all circumstances then whether or not ample provision has been developed to protect the Government because it will not know in advance what the cost will be. But business firms will come forward—we can be quite certain of that—and will ask for the exemptions, and will have their influence peddlers working on the Board, saying, "Our case is different. Do not subject us to renegotiation." The political, financial, and economic pressure on the Board will be great. Its members will have to be men of steel to resist these pressures. There will be a great temptation to use fraud. Even if the members be men of steel, they will spend a large part of their time fending off those who ask for exemptions rather than getting on with the work promptly.

Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. KILGORE rose.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I have only a brief amount of time left. I should like to finish my statement if I can. Then I shall be glad to yield.

The able Senator from Georgia and the able Senator from Ohio say that if we renegotiate all contracts, or if the right be given to renegotiate all of them, there will be so much work that the Board will be swamped. I should like to point out that there is a dollar exemption. In the House bill it is $100,000 and in the Senate bill it is $500,000. I think the first is too low and the second too high. But the small firms will be exempted. Their cases, which are large in number, will not come up.

Then, I should like to point out that the Renegotiation Board can conduct a preliminary audit and after production and after costs have been ascertained, can determine whether or not renegotiations should be carried out. This preliminary audit does not take much time. It can be done rather briefly from sworn profit and loss statements of the company as a whole. Then if the profits seem too large, and only in that case, will they proceed to detailed renegotiation.

Mr. President, I think it is vitally important that we leave open to carelessness and fraud as few loopholes as possible. Clause (3) and certain other clauses open the gate wide for wholesale exemptions involving billions of the taxpayers' dollars.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I was wondering if, in the Senator's opinion, the Board could properly allow an exemption unless it had in effect renegotiated the profits to ascertain whether or not they were exorbitant. That is the only reason for providing renegotiation, and the absence of exorbitant profit is the only justification for granting exemptions.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There is the precise point. This clause would permit the Board to grant exemptions in advance before any production was brought about and before any preliminary examination of profit was carried through.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I was out of the room for a short time and did not hear the Senator's entire statement. I wondered whether the Senator discussed permissive exemption No. 1—"any contract or subcontract to be performed outside the territorial limits of continental United States or in Alaska"? Does the Senator realize that under contracts performed by local corporations in the United States, if 80 percent of their business is done outside continental United States they do not even pay income taxes? Now it is proposed that merely because a contract is outside the United States that is a reason why it should not be renegotiated. In other words, if a contract is obtained outside the United States, the sky is the limit. If 80 percent of the total business is outside continental United States, it is not even necessary to pay income tax. Does the Senator know of any reason why there should be any such exemption?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not. I am grateful to the Senator from Michigan for bringing forward this additional argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. On this question the yeas and nays have already been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Chapman	Green
Anderson	Clements	Hayden
Bennett	Connally	Hendrickson
Brewster	Cordon	Hennings
Bricker	Douglas	Hickenlooper
Bridges	Duff	Hill
Butler, Md.	Dworshak	Hoey

McCarran	O'Conor	Tobey
McCarthy	O'Mahoney	Watkins
McClellan	Pastore	Wherry
McFarland	Robertson	Wiley
Magnuson	Russell	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I announce that the Senators from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON and Mr. MCMAHON] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent on pubic business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea," and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay" and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. NIXON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—42

Aiken	Hennings	Morse

So the amendment of Mr. DOUGLAS was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, earlier I sent an amendment to the desk, but, in view of the vote on the Douglas amendment, it is entirely unnecessary to offer it, because the amendment would simply have prevented the Board from delegating its power to grant permissive exemptions. It is therefore unnecessary to offer the amendment, and I do not offer it.

I desire to take this occasion to say, however, that in view of the amendment which has now been agreed to, my candid judgment is that the act becomes incapable of administration. Time will demonstrate the truthfulness of this statement as shown by the experience under the World War II Act when it was found that discretionary exemptions were necessary to administer the act in a way to properly carry out its functions. I have no further amendment to offer.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield the floor. But there is no pending amendment.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. In the event the bill goes to conference, and the provision which has just been stricken should be proposed to be restored by the conferees from the other body, would the Senator then be in a position to propose at that time the amendment which he now is not presenting, but which would prevent the Board from delegating its power?

Mr. GEORGE. I am not sure, but I think it could not be done. I may say, however, that I always abide by the votes taken by the Senate. If the Senate does not want renegotiation of contracts, I would be bound to uphold its wishes. But if the Senator from South Dakota, who has shown unusual alertness in comprehending and understanding the entire process of renegotiation, desires that the amendment be offered, so that if, in conference, there should be a restoration of the provision just stricken out, I will raise no objection. I am sure that there is no objection on the part of any Senator to saying that the permissive authority, which has now been stricken out of the act, should not be delegated if it should be restored.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, if I may, I should like to offer the amendment which the Senator from Georgia refererd to just recently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on pages 34 and 35 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota has offered an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 37, line 22, after the word "rules", it is proposed to insert "and other than its power to grant permissive exemptions under section 106 (d)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, as some of the Senators now present were not in the Chamber when the amendment was discussed, if I may, I should like to speak very briefly on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, this is an amendment which was drawn by the Senator from Georgia to make it clear that the Board might not delegate or redelegate any power to make permissive exemptions. At present the section covering permissive exemptions has been stricken from the bill, but if it should be restored either on reconsideration or as a result of conference with the House, it seems to me the Senate and the country would want the assurance that if the power to grant any kind of permissive exemption were granted to the Board, it should not be delegated by the Board to some clerk.

This point arose in the discussion on Monday, and it was pointed out that the Board had certain powers of delegation and redelegation of its duties, and of powers and duties which might be assigned to it under the powers of other acts. Certainly if it is to delegate any power, it should not delegate to any other board or to any subagency or to any clerk in a department the right to grant permissive exemptions. That is why I feel the amendment should be incorporated in the bill, so that we will be sure that there can be no delegation of power to grant permissive exemptions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment on pages 34 and 35 was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask the Senate not to reconsider the vote, because I am willing to be bound by it. I merely want the country to know that there are some Members of this body who apparently do not want renegotiation of contracts. I know this amendment will bog down the enforcement of the law as it did in prior years. I hope very much that the Senate will have a vote on the Senator's motion and not on a motion to table.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. McFARLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I announce that the Senators from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON and Mr. MCMAHON] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea" and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay" and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. NIXON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 41, nays 41, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 41, and the nays are 41—a tie vote. The motion is rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, how much time is available on the motion which is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifteen minutes is allowed to each side.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I object to the withdrawal of the motion at this stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the motion can be withdrawn only by a majority vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is true. It cannot be withdrawn by the proponent of the motion.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, inasmuch as there seems to be some doubt on the subject, I suggest that we proceed on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GEORGE. I have risen to speak on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the pending motion.

Mr. President, the Senate has voted to strike from the bill the discretionary exemption power. Having stricken from the bill this power, the Senate should vote to strike also the mandatory exemptions in order to be at all consistent.

Mr. President, the moment that is done, farm products, lumber, and cattle are subject to renegotiation on contracts and subcontracts relating to these commodities. The moment that is done, iron ore will be subject to renegotiation from the moment it comes out of the ground. If Senators wish to destroy the Renegotiation Act, that is the choice they have.

Let me say to Senators from the South and from cotton-growing States that under the House bill as it stands today, a cotton gin with only 450 or 500 bales of cotton, or a warehouseman who stores only 500 bales of cotton, will become subject to renegotiation the moment the cotton goes into a mill and the Government made a contract with the mill. That is so because today cotton is worth, with the seed, more than $200 a bale, and 500 bales would bring a contract up to more than $100,000, the amount provided in the House bill.

Under the World War II act, under which our country lived when we were fighting for our very existence, and when we were the arsenal for all mankind, the permissive and mandatory provisions were contained in the law. They had to be left in the law in order to make it administratively feasible. Under the previous act the Board did not have power to renegotiate in the case of any metal or ore until it had reached such a stage that it could be utilized in an industrial process. We must be consistent. We do not want the Board, which has arbitrary power, to say that a contract which is made by the Government with a citizen has yielded excessive profits, with practically nothing but the conscience of the Board to guide it. We do not want to say that the contract of expert engineer or scientist, who is brought to Washington as a consultant, will be subject to the act, though the Board knows that such a consultant could never earn $100,000 during the course of the year. Nevertheless he would have to be queried. He would have to fill out reports. He would have to go to all sorts of trouble, and the Board would have to go to him. The whole process would bog down. I simply say that if Senators do not want any mandatory exemptions in the bill, such exemptions should not be written into it. I say: Do not do it for agricultural products; do not do it for wool; do not do it for cattle; do not do it for beef; do not do it for cotton; do not do it for wheat; do not do it for any other agricultural product; do not do it for a single ounce of ore or a single mineral which comes out of the ground, because there can be no consistency in saying to the Board, "We will prevent you from looking at certain contracts for renegotiation purposes, but we will not give you the power to exempt from renegotiation a contract which the Board knows can never result in excessive or unreasonable profits."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator cited the example of a man who comes here as a consultant. The Senator stated that his compensation could never exceed $100,000 a year. He would be exempt under the provision still remaining, the $500,000 exemption sponsored by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly; but the Board would have to query him about his contract. The Board would have to ask him to show what renegotiable business he had done under contracts with A, B, C, and D, although the Board might know that he would not be subject to being renegotiated.

Mr. BREWSTER. He would not be subject to renegotiation unless this total were more than $500,000.

Mr. GEORGE. How would the Board know it until he had been queried and until he had answered all the inquiries?

Mr. BREWSTER. The Board is forbidden to go into the question of profits on any contracts totaling less than $500,000.

Mr. GEORGE. How would the Board know that the total was less than $500,000?

Mr. BREWSTER. It would know that on the basis of a simple return. The Board would not have to spend time examining contracts.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Government knows how much it is paying the man.

Mr. GEORGE. He may be working for various individuals.

The distinguished Senator from Maine and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] were wholly misled, and misinterpreted General Hirsch's testimony. General Hirsch objected to the delegation of authority by a board back to a procurement officer, and allowing the procurement officer himself to exempt the contract from renegotiation. That is what General Hirsch was talking about. That is all he was talking about.

We wrote into the bill a provision that there should be no delegation of power to a procurement officer, and there will be no delegation by the Board at all, under the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

It is not a question of whether or not a person is liable to renegotiation. It is a question of going through all the details of accounting work to show that no contract or subcontract which he had with the Government brought him within the limitation fixed under the terms of the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am in thorough accord with the viewpoint so forcefully expressed by the Senator from Georgia, that the adoption of the amendment would make the proposed act unworkable.

Some of my colleagues seem to be fearful that the Board will not porperly discharge its duties from the standpoint of protection of the Government and the taxpayers. When we dispose of this issue, which I hope will be disposed of by reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and then eliminating the amendment, an amendment will be offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] to provide for the kind of independent board which the House contemplated, a Board composed of the best type of men, not less than three of whom shall be from civilian life. That is the key to the situation.

No Army officer could draw the $12,500 or $15,000, whichever it may be, while he was drawing his military pay. The advice I get is that he would probably be required to resign from the Army, the Navy, or the Air Force. Then where would the choice lie? It would lie with those willing to resign from the service. The best type of officer, who wished to remain in the military service, could not accept the appointment.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entirely correct. If this amendment prevails, the Board will not have the power to exempt from renegotiation any contract affecting the production or distribution of the hydrogen bomb.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it the distinguished Senator's position that if the permissive exemption provision is stricken out, then all mandatory exemptions should also be eliminated, because there are so many types of contracts that should properly be exempt that they cannot be set forth in the act; and therefore, if they cannot be set forth in the act and cannot be eliminated from the recapture clause, then nothing should be exempted? Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. GEORGE. I simply say that there is absolutely no consistency in not allowing the Board to exempt a contract with respect to which, in its judgment and opinion, there could not possibly be excessive profits, and then writing into the bill a group of mandatory exemptions.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. There are a large number of such types of contracts.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly there are. In order to protect the agricultural and stock-raising interests, as well as the mining interests, we had to amend the House bill and go back to the World War II Act. Who could say that the conferees on the part of the Senate could contend for that amendment for one moment, in the face of the vote taken by the Senate to strike the provision giving the Board itself power to make an exemption in the case of a contract which clearly ought to be exempted?

Mr. BREWSTER and Mr. FERGUSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, has my time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has three minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has control over 15 minutes of time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, it is quite clear why the Senator from Georgia should desire that the mandatory exemptions should be the issue at this time; but a mandatory exemption is an absolute prohibition on abuse. There might be arguments as to whether some items should be exempted, but that question is not here raised. The whole question is about the permissive exemptions. Mandatory exemptions are clearly laid down in the bill, covering agriculture, mining, and certain products of the soil. That provision remains firm. The very action of the Senate in striking out permissive exemptions is clearly designed to prevent very grave and gross abuses of administrative discretion such as those which have been revealed in such telling, repeated, and increasing force in recent weeks and months.

If the question of the mandatory exemptions is presented, if the Senator from Georgia feels that that question should be presented, the Senate can vote upon it. Personally, the Senator from Maine has no doubt as to the result, whatever might be the arguments on one side or the other.

However, on the question of permissive exemptions, the issue is clear. If there is not $500,000 in total Government payments to any individual or concern, the contract does not come within the purview of the act in any way. It is not a question of what a man made or did not make. It is only a question of what the Government finds is due the corporation or individual; and if the totals for the individual or corporation are less than $500,000, under the terms of the bill that is the end of the matter. There is no investigation, no discussion, no renegotiation, no action of any character, and no burden on the Board. So the illustration of the petty amounts—they are not really petty—up to $500,000 is entirely outside the scope of the issue.

With respect to permissive exemptions, the dangers of abuse have been repeatedly pointed out. There is no question in the mind of the Senator from Maine as to the caliber of General Hirsch, who had more experience in this field than any other man, and whose administration was characterized by everyone concerned as beyond reproach. Based on his judgment, his wisdom, his experience, he urged that the permissive exemption should no longer remain within the act. It was on that basis that so many Members concerned with the discussion before, and with the recent study, were persuaded this possibility of abuse should be wiped out.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has indicated that the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] are mistaken as to what General Hirsch said in regard to the elimination of the exemption. The Senator from Michigan knows that he was not misled, because the words of General Hirsch were:

> I have been thinking it over, and the one real recommendation that I would like to make is the elimination of exemptions. That is the one recommendation that I would make.

I asked him this question:

> That is any exemption?

General Hirsch said:

> Yes.

In other words, he was for the elimination of exemptions.

Now it has been indicated here on the floor that the proposed legislation will not work if exemptions are taken out of the bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Was it not General Hirsch's idea that the mandatory exemptions should be eliminated?

Mr. FERGUSON. He wanted them all eliminated.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If he wanted them all eliminated, that would mean deleting the mandatory exemptions.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is quite correct, but that is not the proposal before the Senate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is the proposal before the Senate if we are accepting General Hirsch as an authority.

Mr. BREWSTER. The impracticability of eliminating the mandatory exemptions is due to the eloquence of the Senator from Colorado and his associates. So everybody knows it is useless to propose the elimination of the mandatory exemptions.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator quotes an authority for guidance in a limited field, which would eliminate all mandatory exemptions, which certainly limits the general's authority under the predominant view of the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan was not mistaken as to what General Hirsch meant. The Senator from Michigan is not of the opinion that this bill will be in any way weakened by such a proposal. It will in fact be strengthened. Let there be no doubt that I favor renegotiation, and that the principle of renegotiation is strengthened by deleting exemptions.

Questions may be raised on the floor with respect to those who make the A-bomb. It has been said on the floor that those who have A-bomb and nitrogen bomb contracts have them on the basis of cost plus a dollar. Those contracts would not be renegotiated under any circumstances.

The bill contains an exemption with respect to security. How can the examination of a board into the profits under a contract affect security? I suppose all members of the Board and employees are going to be cleared for security. If we permit the use of that kind of a security shield as a basis for exemption we would not have any contracts renegotiated, because the services would say that all the contracts involved security and were not open to scrutiny.

I wish to present to the Senate the fact that there is a great distinction between saying to the Board "You cannot grant exemptions" and giving the Board discretion in determining the amount of profit. When the Board is given the power to grant exemption it can grant an exemption without going into the matter of profit. The Board can grant exemption without even looking into the facts. But when we say to the Board that they can determine the amount of profit we assume that they are going to look into all the facts. After they secure the facts it is quite true they can play favoritism by allowing one contractor 1 percent more than another contractor. That is true. But there is a great difference between saying that they can do it after the record has been made, which record would be capable of being scrutinized by the Congress, and to say that they can arbitrarily, without any cause whatever, make the contract exempt from renegotiation, and that there will be no determination on the basis of the profits.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Does the Senator feel that if the Board knew that in a certain case it would come up with the answer of zero in the matter of profits it should proceed with renegotiation?

Mr. FERGUSON. If the Board knew that the determination would be zero, it should give the contractor a clear bill of health and consider that the contract had been renegotiated. Bear in mind that what we are renegotiating on is profits. I do not find anything in the bill which provides that the Board should go into all the figures. On a general review they can tell from the income tax and the balancing of the books how much each company is making on its contracts, and can tell whether or not an excessive profit has been made.

I wish to call to the attention of the Senate how this matter was handled in the past. The War Investigating Committee spent many hours, after the war was over, in trying to provide a guide should there be a need for any future renegotiation legislation. What did the committee do after weeks of examination of contracts? They made the following recommendation:

> The committee believes that any future Renegotiation Act be improved in the following specific ways:
> (a) By bringing within its operation all contractors with an annual war business exceeding $100,000.
>
> (b) Including war contracts of all Government agencies.
> (c) By eliminating all mandatory and permissive exemptions so that all Government contractors with more than an annual business of $100,000 are renegotiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I think it is well that we clarify the issues somewhat. The distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] stated that it was obvious that some Members of the Senate did not desire a renegotiation act. While the Senator from Georgia did not specify who the individuals were, it is quite apparent he thought this group consisted of those of us who want to eliminate the permissive exemptions from the act.

I am sure that upon reflection the Senator from Georgia will come to exactly the opposite conclusion. It is because we believe in a renegotiation act that we do not believe an administrative body should be given the power when a contract is made, to exempt that contract and the contractor from renegotiation. That is the issue.

It is because we believe in the principle of renegotiation that we say that individual contractors should not, by decision of an administrative body, be free from renegotiation—for these are administrative bodies which can proceed in secret, be exposed to hidden influences, hand down decisions which they do not have to justify, and take away from the Treasury and the people of the United States billions of dollars. It is precisely that potential form of vice we want to stop.

So those of us who propose the amendment, far from being the foes of renegotiation, as has been implied, are the friends and advocates of renegotiation.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has pointed out, the question of the mandatory exemptions is not involved in this amendment. The mandatory exemptions are covered from page 28 to the top of page 34. We are not now proposing an amendment to strike out the mandatory exemptions. But we do say that the permissive exemptions on pages 34–35 are extremely dangerous, because we know that in the past they have been abused, and because the man who was in charge of this matter in the Second World War opposed them. An eminent committee of the Eightieth Congress, consisting of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], and the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] all joined in opposing them. We should not expose the Board to such temptations. I think they made a good report.

Mr. President, this is a matter of extreme importance, and I hope very much that we shall not reconsider the vote by which my amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not care to belabor the issue. The very report which was submitted by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] recommended the elimination of all exemptions, both mandatory and permissive.

Mr. President, we now find ourselves in this peculiar situation, and I am going to deal fairly with the Senate, as I have always tried to do: The House of Representatives did not provide sufficient relief for agricultural products; for cattle; for wool; it did not provide sufficient relief for minerals, and so on. The Senate had to do it. Can the conferees on the part of the Senate go to the conferees on the part of the House and say to them, "Gentlemen, you were wrong in not allowing the mandatory exemptions which we have written in the bill to fully protect American agriculture, American livestock growers, American mining interests"? Can we do that, Mr. President, in the face of a vote by the Senate against even permissive exemptions?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, someone may do that, but it would take a person with an elastic conscience.

I can assure the distinguished Senator from Maine that the conferees on the Finance Committee would not expose themselves to that sort of situation.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; I do not yield. I have but 3 minutes.

As I have said, it is not a question of what is involved in this amendment, but it is a question of what is involved in a conference report.

Now I wish to make this statement to the Senate, and I do so in all kindness: It is passing strange to me that we are called upon to rewrite a bill of this character on the floor of the Senate, when our committee has given honest and conscientious and hard work to the responsibilities placed upon it by the Senate; and I mean precisely what I am saying. If Senators do not wish to support the committee, but wish to rewrite the bill in order to satisfy the wishes of particular groups, all good and well. Then I shall be under no obligation to support the committee's findings and deliberations. However, what Senators are doing by their vote is to place such a tremendous burden upon the Board as to bog down renegotiation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, let me inquire whether I have any time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I listened with some amazement to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Georgia, for whom I have the greatest regard, when he was critical of the fact that Members of the Senate had the effrontery to propose amendments which would change the bill prepared by the committee. It seems to me that if his thesis is correct, it would mean that no amendments should ever be offered from the floor or otherwise to a bill prepared by a committee. It would mean a complete surrender of the authority and duties and responsibilities of Members of the Senate, other than those who sit on a specific committee. So far as I am concerned, I would feel that under those circumstances, service in the Senate was well nigh useless. I would not want to acknowledge or agree to any thesis of that sort.

Let me say that when I speak on this subject, I do not speak in complete ignorance or from inexperience, for, by appointment of the President and the Secretary of War, in 1919, I served on the very first Board of Contract Adjustment after the First World War. We had the same problems. I saw the tremendous pressure which was brought on the Board by various interests, not in bad faith, but simply because they felt they should not be subject to the provisions of the act as it was then written. We shall have exactly the same situation if we allow permissive exemptions to be made by this Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. All time has expired.

The question now is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Illinois was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Green	Maybank
Anderson	Hayden	Millikin
Bennett	Hendrickson	Monroney
Brewster	Hennings	Morse
Bricker	Hickenlooper	Mundt
Bridges	Hill	Murray
Butler, Md.	Hoey	Neely
Butler, Nebr.	Holland	O'Conor
Byrd	Humphrey	O'Mahoney
Cain	Ives	Pastore

Ecton	McCarran	Tobey
Ellender	McCarthy	Watkins
Ferguson	McClellan	Wherry
Flanders	McFarland	Wiley
Frear	Magnuson	Williams
Fulbright	Malone
George	Martin

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to ask whether the Presiding Officer would be so kind as to state the issue before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The issue now to be passed upon by the Senate is whether it shall reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois was agreed to. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I announce that the Senators from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON and Mr. MCMAHON] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] is unavoidably detained on official business at one of the Government departments.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] who is absent on official business is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea" and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "nay."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. NIXON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—42

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the time for debate on which has been exhausted.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I announce that the Senators from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON and Mr. MCMAHON] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] is unavoidably detained on official business at one of the Government departments.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is absent on official business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] who is absent on official business is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay," and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. NIXON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 42, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. DOUGLAS was rejected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, on page 35, line 16, I offer an amendment to strike out the words "both individually and" and to substitute in lieu thereof the word "only."

The effect of the proposed amendment would be to eliminate the power of the Board to grant exemptions from renegotiation to individual firms, and permit it to grant exemptions only to a general class or type of firms. The Board would be given the power to exempt individual industries or particular types of companies, but not to exempt individual firms within an industry.

Mr. President, I believe the Senate made a very bad decision a moment ago. The adoption of the amendment I now propose would help make it not quite so bad as it otherwise would be.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois L subject to a point of order. My understanding is that the Senator's original amendment was to strike out language in the bill which included the language which the Senator from Illinois now identifies as a single phrase or group of words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels that the language which the Senate refused to strike out is subject to amendment. Therefore the amendment which is now being offered by the Senator from Illinois is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope very much that the Senate will not agree to the amendment which is now being proposed by the Senator from Illinois, although I do not know the precise reasons for the amendment. I do not know whether it could possibly possess any real merit. I am not sufficiently familiar with what the Senator has in mind. Would the Senator mind stating his amendment again?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The amendment is to strike out the words "both individually and" and to substitute therefor the word "only", so as to make lines 16 and 17 read:

> The Board may so exempt contracts and subcontracts only by general classes or types.

Under the amendment the Board could grant an exemption to an industry, but could not grant it to individual firms, or favor them in advance. It would do away with individual favoritism within an industry, although the Board would still be subjected to pressure by an industry.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, it appears to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois has a meritorious purpose. Its purpose is to prevent discrimination and favoritism. On the other hand, I wonder if it would not also prevent the Board from asserting its power of renegotiation if it found a flagrant case in a general class. For example, with respect to class 4, if it came to the attention of the Board that certain contractors had some secret projects, in which the Board felt there were some flagrant examples of excessive profits, how could the Board recapture the renegotiation right, if the proposed amendment were agreed to?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was not the purpose of the Senator from Illinois to permit any permissive exemptions. It was the purpose of the Senator from Illinois to eliminate all permissive exemptions, in order to remove from the administrative Board the temptation to make rulings which would favor particular individuals or classes. However, after some debate and a number of roll calls, such a general amendment was defeated. As the situation now stands, the Board has the power not only to exempt general classes, but individual firms as well. What I am trying to do is to cut down the range of abuse. I would not give the Board any more powers than it now possesses under the bill. I would give it fewer powers, so that it could classify industries or firms according to particular circumstances which may arise, and make a general rule for such firms, but the Board would not be permitted to pick out company A and favor it over company B, or give one company a favor which it did not give to another company in the same category.

Mr. FERGUSON. If the Senator's amendment were agreed to, would it not restore competition? I ask that because at the present time if one man can get an exemption, and another man who is selling the same product cannot get an exemption, there is not fair trade or fair practice. In other words, the amendment would require the Board to treat all firms alike. In the case of the Government's purchase of wheat, one man could submit a bid to the Government and know that while his contract could be renegotiated, the contract of someone else dealing in wheat would be exempted from renegotiation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. The amendment would restore at least the individual enterprise system in such contracts as nearly as it is possible to do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And reduce as much as possible the danger of governmental fix.

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. In the mind of the Senator from Illinois, would his amendment eliminate any possibility of political favoritism?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It would reduce the possibility of political favoritism.

Mr. AIKEN. It would not eliminate it, but it would reduce it?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It would reduce it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if a distinction between classes based upon whether a contract is executed or not executed is not significant. It seems to me that if the Board were given the right to exempt contracts after they have been executed, and a person executing them did not know whether they would be exempt, there would be much less chance of abuse than if an exemption were given in advance. I wonder if we could not achieve the purpose by saying that the Board would have discretion if a contract had been executed under the belief that it would be renegotiated, but that if it found nothing substantial was involved, it could refuse to go forward with renegotiation. Is that not a valid distinction?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think it is. The very process of renegotiation itself gives the Board the power to make a preliminary audit. If the figures do not seem to justify renegotiation, the Board is not compelled to renegotiate. What has been done now is to give the Board the power in advance, before production, before any costs have been determined, to exempt any or all contractors. Now that we have permitted that abuse, I think we should limit it.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. There is no question that the Senator from Illinois has a laudable purpose in presenting his amendment. It is to prevent favoritism. However, anyone who has studied the problem of renegotiation will find that what it would do would be to defeat what renegotiation permits.

I have before me a copy of the hearings before the House Committee on Ways and Means at the time the Renegotiation Act was amended in 1943. In illustration of what was brought out before the committee, and which I believe to be apt now, Colonel Browning, who did a great deal of the renegotiation in its early stages, brought to our attention the fact that in many instances people who were engaged in making the same product operated with different facilities, different capital structures, and different tooling and equipment. The result in many cases was that although two companies were producing the same product, one company would make more money than the other company. Renegotiation made it possible for the Government to get the production it needed, without the necessity of going to some companies which did not have as efficient tools as others.

For example, Colonel Browning showed us that a contract had been made with a certain company for the manufacture of machine guns at a price of $500 per gun. Another firm was receiving only $400. Yet the company with the $400 price on machine guns made a profit of $24,000,000 on a $51,000,000 contract. Renegotiation made it possible to give the company which was making machine guns at $400 a larger percentage of profit in recognition of its enterprise, and yet to recapture some of that profit for the Government. As a matter of fact, when we asked the result, we were informed that the price was renegotiated down to $280 per gun for one firm, and yet it made a profit of 20 percent. Another firm was reduced to $330 per gun, and yet it made a profit of 13½ percent.

If it were required that machine guns as a class be altogether exempted, we could not reach a situation such as I have described. We would freeze, for the company with the tools which permitted it to make an exorbitant profit of $24,000,000 from a $51,000,000 contract, the right to obtain such a profit, without making it possible for the Board to establish a differential by taking into consideration the experience or the plant and equipment of the various companies. It may be a discretionary feature, but it is something that has to do with the process of renegotiation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield so that I may ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does not the Senator demonstrate the proposition that exemption should be by classes rather than by individuals?

Mr. CASE. The Senator——

Mr. FERGUSON. Just a moment, if I may finish the question. Does the Senator demonstrate that it is necessary that there be renegotiation to determine whether or not there are excessive profits in a given case? Both contracts would have to be renegotiated to get the relative facts. Why should the Board, at the time the contract was entered into or prior thereto, have the right to exempt one manufacturer, and not another, without knowing all of the facts? Is not that the situation at which we are aiming?

Mr. CASE. The broad power of granting exemptions which the Secretary or the head of a procurement agency had under the old act is circumscribed by the five specific areas provided in the permissive exemption provision. While I do not like the idea of treating one firm differently from another, we are dealing with the very difficult problem of trying to encourage private enterprise as much as possible, and yet not make it possible for some firms to make excessive profits in connection with the defense effort. There must be some discretion.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does not the comment of the Senator from South Dakota show very clearly that not only should we not exempt machine-gun manufacturers from negotiation, but that we could not know until after the fact whether or not either of the concerns was going to make excessive profits, since one firm might improve its efficiency?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement. There is some misapprehension on the part of Senators. A number of Senators seem to have the impression that a person may go to the Board and get an exemption for himself, or for a contract which he has not made. That is not true at all. He cannot do so until after his contract is negotiated. It must be in existence. Under the permissive exemption provision of the bill the Board may say, "We know that there are no excess profits involved in this contract, and we will exempt it." It may do so by classes or types or by individual contracts. I rather think that striking out the words "both individually and", as proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, would be harmful and would work very great hardship upon many individuals. But if it is understood that I may take this amendment to conference for the purpose of giving study to it and understanding its real effect, I am willing to take the amendment to conference.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, as an untutored Member of this body, I have often wondered what practical significance to attach to the phrase, "I will take it to conference." I have sometimes thought that this phrase means, "I will take the baby, but I will lay it on someone else's doorstep, and I will not take care of the baby after I have laid it there."

If this type of foundling is to be turned loose and subjected to the devices of the conference committee, I should much prefer to have the amendment voted up or down than to give it such ambiguous treatment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, very frankly, I do not quite see the effect of the Senator's amendment. In fact, I doubt that it is a wise amendment. However, I am willing to give study to it and determine, in conference, whether or not the amendment is meritorious and not harmful to the general purposes of the proposed act. If I were to be called upon to vote upon it at this time I should vote against it and ask the Senate to reject it. I think I am fair in saying to the Senator from Illinois that I will take his amendment to conference and give it careful consideration. If I can see any merit in it, I shall be very glad to support it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. With the assurance from the Senator from Georgia that he will not prematurely abandon the child, I am very glad to accept his offer.

Mr. GEORGE. I will not prematurely abandon the amendment without careful consideration, but I disclaim any responsibility for the parentage of the child. [Laughter.] I want the Senator from Illinois to have that signal honor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very happy to claim it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield. I said I would take the amendment to conference.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to clear up this question. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say it was his opinion that the Board could not have inserted in a contract one of these exemptions, at the time of making the contract?

Mr. GEORGE. No. I said that the contract must be executed before there is any final determination that the contract is not renegotiable.

Mr. FERGUSON. In other words, the contract must be a contract that can be renegotiated, and then the Board rules as to whether or not it will be exempt from renegotiation.

Mr. GEORGE. That is my understanding.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wonder whether the Senator could point out for the RECORD the paragraph or the section which so provides. I inquired from the Board this morning, and did not receive an answer on this question.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not understand how there could be renegotiation unless there had first been negotiation. Renegotiate means simply to negotiate again. That is the literal meaning of the word "renegotiate." Therefore, there must be a contract, and that contract must be negotiated, although the Board might permit a provision to go into a given contract that it would not be subject to renegotiation, if it were clear that there could be no excessive profits. However, I do not think that is the practice.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. As I understand, the Senator is of the opinion that if this provision is carried out, as indicated by the language, it means that the contracting officer makes a contract, and then the Board, after the contract is made, determines whether or not the particular contract is subject to renegotiation.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is correct as to individual contracts. That is my candid statement as to how it should be and is interpreted.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. One of the arguments used for the exemption is that the contracting officer is able to get better prices by virtue of being able to say, "This contract is not going to be renegotiated."

Mr. GEORGE. I did not use that language.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand that.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know where that story came from.

Mr. FERGUSON. That came in the testimony before the War Investigating Committee; that was one of the justifications for permissive exemptions.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that we have completely stripped the procurement officer of any authority to exempt any party to any contract. He does not have that authority under the bill. He cannot renegotiate. The procurement officer is out of the picture. Under the World War II act it developed that by delegating the authority the procurement officer could give an exemption. Of course, that power might be subject to abuse; there is no doubt about it. But under the bill neither a procurement officer nor any agency which has supervision over procurement can have anything to do with the exemption of contracts from renegotiation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am inclined to the opinion that the Senator has a point which is valuable. If these contracts cannot be exempted at the time they are made, but must be exempted later, that would mean that the Board would have to get some facts at least to determine whether or not a contract should be exempted, and there may not be a full renegotiation.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. But even though only a partial renegotiation it could still be of great value.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entirely correct. Since we were at great pains to exclude from the renegotiation process the officer who does the procuring for the Government, and took him out of the picture, since we said that there can be no delegation of this authority, it makes quite a difference.

Mr. FERGUSON. I quite agree with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Whatever may have been the construction given in the past to a prior act, now it would seem to me to be undoubtedly true that before the Board could say to an individual "Your contract need not be renegotiated" it must have looked at some of the facts, it must have something before it to justify it.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think that is true.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would the Senator agree that in presenting the matter to the conference, as he expects to do, that there is very great advantage, both from the standpoint of the administrative burden and of the danger of abuse, if they are able to proceed by classes instead of by individual cases?

Mr. GEORGE. I would be very glad to present the matter fairly. I would be very glad to give it careful consideration.

Mr. BREWSTER. There may be other things to outweigh it, but I thought perhaps the Senator would agree that if it could be handled in this way both the administrative burden would be lightened and the danger of abuse lessened.

Mr. GEORGE. We will certainly give it full consideration and undertake to present it fairly. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I was apparently under a misapprehension, but I should like the Senator to make it clear as to why exemption cannot be made prior to the execution of the contract, without any knowledge of the contract itself. The Senator said that is not the case.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not the case, because under the bill only the Board has the power to exempt. It cannot delegate that power to anyone. It does not make the contract. It is not a party to any contract. It is not a procurement agency. So, if it has any knowledge of the situation at all, it must have after the contract is executed and it has some facts upon which it can act intelligently.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did not realize that. I thought that under the general provision at the top of page 35, lines 16 and 17, the Board could make a general exemption for classes which would apply in the future. It looks that way to me.

Mr. GEORGE. That might be true.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is the only matter that bothered me.

Mr. GEORGE. That may have been true as the House wrote the bill, but the Senator must recollect that we have amended the House bill in certain important particulars. We have said that the Board itself cannot delegate the power to exempt a contract with anybody; that the Board must retain that power. That, of course, makes this measure different from any act we have heretofore passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I have said, Mr. President, that I would carry the amendment to conference for the purpose of carefully studying it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], on page 35, to strike out in lines 16 and 17 the words "both individually and" and to insert the word "only."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the same paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph in lines 16 and 17 on page 35?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes. The amendment I offer is as follows:

On page 35, at the end of line 17, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, however, That the Board may in exceptional or aggravated cases require renegotiation of particular contracts after execution even though contracts of that class may have been previously exempted.

This language follows the thought expressed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] and I think by some other Members of the Senate, that if a particularly aggravated or exceptional case involving inordinate profits appears to have arisen after the execution of the contract within the limitation that it is an exceptional or aggravated case, the Board should nevertheless have the power to renegotiate that contract even though the particular class of contracts may have been exempted in the beginning.

I offer the amendment for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. What does the Senator mean by an aggravated case or an exceptional case?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I will state for legislative history that I mean a case where a very excessive profit has been made or where it developed later that the material which went into the performance of the contract cost a great deal less than was anticipated, or some other situation arose because of which the contractor should not in good conscience accept or want the Government to pay such a tremendous profit on the particular contract. When I use the words "exceptional" or "aggravated," that is what I have in mind.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does the Senator think others will understand what he means by the words "aggravated" and "exceptional"?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I assume that in conference the conferees can work out proper language if my language is not clear.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that his is exactly the negative of the amendment already offered by the Senator from Illinois, which provided that there must be no consideration of the individual contract. That provision of the bill has been stricken out. The Board can only act with respect to classes. Now this proposed amendment completely contradicts the amendment just agreed to.

It also seems to me, Mr. President, that this amendment should be subject to a point of order because it is part of the same line that has already been amended.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment negatives the class amendment which has just been agreed to and is to go to conference, except in cases which are exceptional or aggravated. In such cases my amendment, if adopted, would, of course, negative the class-exemption amendment.

However, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] said, in certain types of cases the board might wish to exempt all contracts of a certain type; and yet certainly it would not be in the public interest or in the interest of the Government, nor would it be proper, to have the Government be unable to renegotiate a particular contract, after having exempted all contracts of the particular class, when it was found that for some particular reason the contractor in the particular case would make an inordinate profit.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I wonder whether this matter should be handled in conference. I understand the Senator's point, and it is worth considering, of course.

The Senator from South Dakota referred to secrecy cases. The Senator wishes to exempt, he says, all contracts which would involve war secrets. Yet, as the Senator pointed out, there might be a case in which it would be desirable to renegotiate a particular contract.

I wonder whether we should not leave the working out of this particular problem to the conferees. In other words, if the House of Representatives wished to accept the amendment, it would then be able to work out the matter in conference.

In regard to this particular provision, I simply ask the Senator whether he might better leave the matter to the conferees. The exemption might apply to a particular class; and yet, as has been stated, as to certain cases, we might not want to have the exemption.

Mr. KEFAUVER. What the Senator from Ohio suggests might be a good procedure to follow. However, if this amendment is not adopted, this matter will not be in conference.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator that it will be in conference, I think.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Will the Senator please read his amendment again?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I shall be glad to do so. On page 35, in line 17, at the end of the line, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following:

Provided, however, That the Board in exceptional or aggravated cases may require renegotiation of particular contracts after execution, even though contracts of that general class may previously have been exempted.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Is it not a fact that, as the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee said a moment ago, this amendment would substantially negative the amendment which has just been adopted by the Senate, namely, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It would not negative that amendment, except for the words "exceptional or aggravated." In other words, the general rule then would be that, as the Senator from Ohio has said, secret contracts or contracts of a particular class could be exempted. However, after exempting such secret contracts generally, if after the execution of a particular secret contract it was found that in some way it worked an inordinate or excessively heavy hardship upon the Government, the Board still would have the right to ask for the renegotiation of the contract.

So, Mr. President, I think my amendment, if adopted, might help in such cases. No doubt certain general classes of contracts, such as those pertaining to secret work, should be exempted; but after exempting them, it might be found that a particular contract which worked a great hardship on the Government should be renegotiated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Who would determine whether the case was exceptional or aggravated? The Board would determine that, would it not?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But the bill provides that the Board may exempt contracts and subcontracts, both individually and by classes and types. The bill uses, in that connection, the words "both individually and." That language provides authority for the Board to take into consideration whether the case is exceptional or aggravated. In other words, these are permissive exemptions; they are not mandatory.

Mr. KEFAUVER. In response to the question of the distinguished Senator from Colorado, I would say that if the Board in the beginning decided to exempt all secret contracts, the words "exceptional or aggravated," in view of the legislative history which would indicate that they related to profits which were inordinate or shocking or in very large amount in proportion to the size of the contract, would establish standards by which the Board could proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The words "both individually and" are written into the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives. Under that language that very thing could be done. I suppose that is why the House used the words "both individually and."

Mr. KEFAUVER. But my amendment includes the words "exceptional or aggravated."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Then I go back to my original question, namely, who would decide what would be an exceptional or an aggravated case Certainly the Board would decide that, would it not?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes; the Board would decide that. However, the words "exceptional or aggravated" would give the Board a standard by which to proceed.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Is it not true that to all intents and purposes the Senator's amendment would destroy the purpose and effect of the language on page 35, in lines 16 and 17, of the bill as it was passed by the House?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I disagree with the Senator. I may say that I spoke to the Senator from Illinois, and I believe he said he would prefer to have this part of the bill remain as it would read as modified by his amendment, but that he would prefer to have my amendment added rather than to have the bill enacted in the form in which it was before his amendment was adopted.

Let me inquire whether I correctly state the position of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think that is substantially correct. To my surprise, my amendment was adopted.

Mr. KEFAUVER. However, I think my amendment improves the amendment of the Senator from Illinois because his amendment now requires the Board, when it wishes to make certain exemptions, to exempt all in that class. It is quite conceivable—and I think would ordinarily happen in connection with the execution of a great number of contracts of a particular class—that there might be one of that type of contract—let us say a secret contract—which it would be outrageous not to have renegotiated, and in that connection not to have some funds returned to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, in line 1, it is proposed to strike out the words "if any of", and insert in lieu thereof the words "except to the extent that."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, this amendment is a slight one to paragraph (d) on page 4, under the heading "Suspension of certain profit limitations."

At that point the bill now reads as follows:

(d) Suspension of certain profit limitations: Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, the profit-limitation provisions of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503, 505), as amended and supplemented, and of section 505 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended and supplemented (46 U. S. C. 1155 (b)), shall not apply to any contract or subcontract if any of the receipts or accruals therefrom are subject to this title.

Mr. President, under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, there are contracts for seven vessels which were in the course of construction on January 1, 1951. An estimated $125,000,000 had accrued to contractors at that time. This part of the bill, as it now reads, would free such contracts or subcontracts from the profit limitation provisions of the Merchant Marine Act. The language to which I refer is as follows: "shall not apply to any contract or subcontract if any of the receipts or accruals therefrom are subject to this title."

The $125,000,000 I understand would also be freed from renegotiation, as the new renegotiation bill would free merchant marine accruals antedating January 1, 1951. In other words, the $125,000,000, which I understand has already accrued to contractors, would be exempt, both from the 10 percent limitation of profits, under the Merchant Marine Act, and, because of the dating of the pending renegotiation bill, would also be exempt from renegotiation.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt the Senator is correct in his statement, and that this matter can be dealt with in conference. However, on the point the Senator raises I have an amendment which I think is somewhat clearer, for this reason: The Renegotiation Act of 1948 suspends the profit limitation provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act, with respect to any contract subject to the 1948 act, but that is not true with respect to the Merchant Marine Act.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Therefore, as the Senator properly points out, we would have two conflicting acts, under the amendment, starting on page 4, line 24, after the word "apply", we insert a comma and the following: "in the case of such act of March 27, 1934"—referring to the Vinson-Trammell Act—and then, on page 5, line 2, before the period, we insert a comma and the following: "and, in the case of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to any contract or subcontract entered into after December 31, 1950, if any of the receipts or accruals therefrom are subject to this title." I think that will accomplish, in a little clearer way, precisely what the Senator intends by his amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. Do I correctly understand that the entire matter will be considered in conference?

Mr. GEORGE. The entire matter can be considered in conference.

Mr. AIKEN. If that be true, and if it is simply a case of proper wording so as not to exempt either under the Merchant Marine Act or this renegotiation bill the $125,000,000 which already has accrued to contractors in connection with the construction of these ships, I am not anxious to press the amendment, if the Senator from Georgia can take care of the matter in conference.

Mr. GEORGE. I intended to raise that very question in conference, and, in fact, I had this amendment prepared. I have no objection, if the Senator wishes to offer another amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. No. I did not know that the Senator from Georgia had an amendment in mind.

Mr. GEORGE. The matter could go to conference, and we certainly shall have to notice it then, because there is a necessity of correcting what the Senator has pointed out.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, has prepared an amendment, I shall be very happy to withdraw the one which I have offered, and let him submit his.

Mr. GEORGE. I have prepared it. It requires two changes, instead of the one which the Senator has offered. We want to make it clear that the suspension which is intended to apply to contracts under the Merchant Marine Act does not interfere with the Merchant Marine Act, insofar as the percentage limitations which have already been applied to that contract are concerned.

Mr. AIKEN. That is, until January 1?

Mr. GEORGE. Until January 1; that is correct. I would offer my amendment, or let the Senator offer his, and take it to conference.

Mr. AIKEN. It does not matter to me.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Vermont has the floor, though I shall be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Michigan to enable him to address a question to the Senator from Georgia without losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Michigan may proceed.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it the purpose of this amendment to make subject to renegotiation money which may already be due and payable under the Merchant Marine Act?

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean prior to January 1?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; prior to January 1.

Mr. GEORGE. No; that is not the purpose. The purpose of this amendment is to leave the contractors under the Merchant Marine Act.

Mr. FERGUSON. So that they might get up to 10 percent under that act?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. And then, after that date, it would affect all money due or to become due under this law?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is the purpose?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct; and since there are two different standards, it is necessary to make this amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. May I ask the Senator from Georgia whether, if the amendment which I have offered is adopted, that will then put before the conference committee everything which should be before the committee?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think so. I think it is necessary to begin the amendment on page 4, line 24; and if the Senator will accept my amendment, I can assure him the amendment I have has been worked out with some care.

Mr. AIKEN. I shall be very glad to withdraw my amendment so that the Senator from Georgia may offer the one to which he refers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his amendment. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 24, after the word "apply", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words, "in the case of such act of March 27, 1934,"; and on page 5, line 2, before the period, to insert a comma and the words, "and, in the case of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to any contract or subcontract entered into after December 31, 1950, if any of the receipts or accruals therefrom are subject to this title."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 29, line 6, after the word "wool", it is proposed to insert "in the grease or scoured."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is very simple. I am informed that during World War II the words "ginned cotton and scoured wool" were never thoroughly interpreted, as to whether wool and cotton in those forms were agricultural commodities in the raw or natural state. The purpose of the amendment is to determine whether "wool in the grease or scoured" is an agricultural commodity in its natural state. As I understand, scoured wool is simply cleaned wool, which is still in its raw state. There are in Massachusetts many woolen mills and wool dealers. As I understand, many of the mills do not have the facilities to scour or clean wool. Therefore, if the dealers had to clean wool, the cost would be passed back to the producers and would cut down the price of wool in the natural condition.

I hope the distinguished chairman may be willing to take this amendment to conference, in order that it may be worked out. The Senator stated to me this morning, in answer to an inquiry, that he did not think the bill in its present form included scoured wool. I therefore believe that in the interest of the producer of wool, and in the interest of having wool considered as an agricultural commodity, this is a fair interpretive amendment. I ask that it be taken to conference, there to be perfected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, although I have had no request or notice from anyone representing the wool trade, I am very glad to accept my colleague's statement of the purpose of this amendment. This very vital industry is a tremendous factor in the livelihood of people in Massachusetts and, of course, the woolen industry as a whole is of national significance. I wish to take this opportunity to record myself in favor of the amendment, and to express the hope that it may be agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two on the particular subject now being discussed. When we were considering the bill in committee, one of my main objectives was to see that agricultural products were exempted and to include cleaning or processing in order to put them into a marketable condition. My own personal understanding is that ginned cotton and scoured wool come under the same category.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I regret that I am not able to take this amendment to conference, for the reason that the Senate committee bill does restore the World War II exemptions. The exemption under the World War II act has been construed, and as construed by regulations of the Department wool was exempted only if in the grease. Scoured wool is not exempted under the construction of the World War II act. Therefore, the amendment would broaden the exemption to much wider limits than at the present, because the scouring of wool is a step beyond the first form in which it has an established market.

Some of my colleagues have called my attention to the fact that cotton is construed to mean cotton in bale; but cotton in bale is the form in which cotton is ordinarily and generally sold. Of course, it can, as a remnant, be sold in the seed, which sometimes occurs; but that is not the usual and general form. So there is no analogy.

Much as I should like to take the amendment to conference, I am satisfied that to include wool after it had been subjected to the process of scouring would be broadening the exemption quite too far.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that the words which have been inserted by the committee are the same words which were used in the World War II act?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct; we have gone back to that act, and the words in that act were given a construction which would exclude scoured wool.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Then, does the Senator believe that the information I have received from the wool group in my home State of Massachusetts to the effect that the term "wool" was never clearly interpreted; is incorrect?

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is; but if it were so, perhaps the Senator would not need any legislation on the subject. I believe, however, that the term was construed by regulations to mean wool in the grease.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. So that if the wool is going to be exempted, it has to be wool in the grease, and it has to be sold as wool in the grease, rather than as scoured wool?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe the Senator is correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If a dealer sells scoured wool, having scoured it himself before he sells it, he has to take that into consideration in the price he quotes the producer; does he not?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct; it might have that effect, and undoubtedly would have that effect. But scouring is a step in the processing of wool, it is one degree beyond the form in which wool is generally and customarily sold.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But, as I understand, scoured wool is merely cleaned wool. That is correct; is it not?

Mr. GEORGE. That is my understanding.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. In the Senator's opinion, that is one step in a process, and therefore it is no longer a commodity in the raw?

Mr. GEORGE. I may say to the Senator that it is so interpreted. Perhaps the interpretation is not correct, but it was so interpreted under the World War II act provision.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Assume the bill is left in its present form, without any change, without the amendment which I have offered, the word "wool" would still be open to an interpretation which might include scouring. It might be reinterpreted so as to include scoured wool, as well as wool in the grease; might it not?

Mr. GEORGE. It might be, if the conclusion might now be reached that it is erroneous to confine the interpretation to wool in the grease only, if I understood the Senator's question.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That was my question.

Mr. GEORGE. It might be so construed, but having been construed as wool which had not passed out of the grease form, I could only remind the Senator of the construction which was given to the term as it was used in the old act, namely, that it did not include scoured wool, but only wool in the grease.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Therefore, a wool trader or a wool broker would have to sell the wool in the grease, or, if he had to scour it, he would have to consider the scouring as a separate process, and charge someone for it?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct. That is the theory on which the interpretation I have cited was placed upon the act.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If, under the interpretation of the act, scoured wool were now included by the amendment I have offered, with the support of my colleague, it would differentiate wool from every other agricultural commodity, would it?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe it would, because it would carry the commodity to a process beyond what is now ordinarily the process through which the commodity must pass in order to get into the merchantable or marketable shape in which it is generally and customarily sold.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, the only purpose I have in suggesting support for the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts is that it is in the interest of the producer. The whole purpose of exempting agricultural commodities in their raw stage, and every stage in which they become marketable, is to protect the producer. That was the reason why cotton was exempted until it had been ginned, and that is exactly the reason why wool should be exempted until it has been cleaned. I believe the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts should be accepted.

Mr. GEORGE. There might be some reason for so construing the word "wool," but I must remind the Senator that cotton is not usually and customarily sold in the seed. In fact, it would be purely accidental, or done to meet the exigencies of a particular case. It must ordinarily, generally, and customarily be ginned before it is placed in a condition to be sold.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Is the answer of the Senator predicated on the fact that the seed is the heaviest part of the cotton, and is usually consumed in the area where it is produced, and the lint is the lesser weight of the cotton, and is generally processed at a place distant from where it is produced?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is correct. Personally I should like to take the amendment to conference, but I realize that it would open the bill to very severe attack, and I am anxious to see the World War II act restored, because it has been construed, it has been applied, and it did function fairly well.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I am somewhat confused by the answer of the distinguished Senator from Georgia. Wool in the grease certainly is a raw product. While the scouring may be one step in processing, what is the difference between wool that is scoured and wool in the grease, so far as industrial use is concerned? It is not fabricated until it is scoured.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe that is true ordinarily. I believe if the Senator will study the question very carefully he will find that even in the tariff acts Congress has always differentiated between wool in the grease and scoured wool, and the yarn, and wool in the different processes. I think a distinction between wool in the grease and scoured wool was made in the Tariff Act of 1930, known as the Smoot-Hawley Act. I am pretty sure that my recollection is correct in that respect. I know there was a great deal of discussion, and that we spent the whole summer on that bill before there was any air-cooling system in the Capitol.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Would it not be unfortunate to classify wool which had not been used for fabricating purposes, or which was not intended to be used for fabricating purposes, in any other way except as wool in the grease? In other words, someone may be required to pay for something which does not exist. I can see how a distinction could be made for tariff purposes. The point made by the Senator from Massachusetts and my colleague from Nebraska has raised some doubt in my mind. Why should scoured wool be placed in a different class than wool in the grease, for the purposes of this proposed act, on the theory that scoured wool represents the result of one step in the process, when that is not the fact, because scoured wool is just as much a raw material as wool in the grease? The wool has not been fabricated up to that stage. Perhaps there is nothing to argue about on that point.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator may be right. However, the same language in the World War II Act was made the subject of regulation and construction by the Board. The Board may have committed an error, but they construed wool to mean only wool in the grease.

Mr. WHERRY. That would establish a precedent, which might be followed at this time, or might not be followed. I am wondering whether the distinguished Senator would not agree to do in the case of wool what is done in the case of other products. It may be that the same construction would be placed upon the word "wool" which was applied in the last act. Why could not the Senator take the question to conference and discuss it with the conferees, on the theory that there is no intention to grant anything to wool which is not being granted to any other product, but that, until wool is in a stage or process for industrial use, wool in the grease and scoured wool come under the same classification?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. What I am about to say comes to me second-hand. However, I understand that in some instances farmers who think they will get a better price, or hope to get a better price, scour their own wool and then try to sell it directly to the mill. I do not think they would do it if scoured wool were not interpreted as wool in the raw or in the grease. Therefore, it does affect the price received by the producer of a raw agricultural product.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I had in mind. I do not know to what extent that has been done. It may represent only a small percentage. My feeling is that if a construction could be placed on what is meant by raw wool as wool which had not been previously processed, regardless of the form in which it came from the producer, whether scoured or in the grease, it could be placed in the same class.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield further so that I may ask another question of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GEORGE. If I have the time to yield, I do so.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from Georgia is very courteous and helpful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired. The Senator from Massachusetts has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator from Georgia would be willing to take the matter to conference in an attempt to work out an interpretation, and clear up the subject. It might be helpful to him and his conferees. If, on the other hand, there is no further information available, and scouring is one step in the process, that would be another matter. At least we would be able to look into the subject a little more fully.

Mr. GEORGE. I am almost persuaded by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, but I am not quite persuaded. I will do this: I will ask the House managers if they would be willing to indicate in their report that the word "wool" had been a bit too narrowly interpreted under the World War II act. That might be of help to the Senator. That is as far as I could go without opening the bill to very serious changes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Knowing him as well as I do, I am sure the Senator from Georgia will handle it to the best of his ability.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will not need more than 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true, however, that the only agricultural form in which wool is produced is in the grease, and that scouring is an additional process over and above the raising and production of the wool?

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is correct. In my opinion, that is what persuaded the Board, under the World War II act, to say that the term referred only to wool in the grease.

Mr. CONNALLY. Otherwise, wool yarn could be included.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; or any successive step. As I understand, scouring is a necessary step in the process. However, there is a ready market for wool in the grease.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I recall, scoured wool weighs only about a third of what raw wool weighs. Is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas addressed his inquiry to me, as I judge he did, I would say that scouring takes nothing from the wool. It merely removes——

Mr. CONNALLY. The grease and dirt.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It removes the sand, dirt, and grease which may have gathered upon the back of the sheep on the range. The wool, as a product, is not at all changed by the process of scouring. From my point of view, scouring does not constitute a step in the processing of wool.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I yield whatever time the Senator from Nebraska desires to take.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. I shall not need very much time. Having been in the business of handling agricultural products, I can say very definitely that there are few, if any, agricultural products which are handled in their absolute raw stages as they come from an individual farmer. Wheat, for example, when it is finally sold, has been cleaned. Some of it is clipped. It has been separated into different varieties as to protein, and other classifications. However, it is still in its raw state, and is so considered by the Renegotiation Board. Wool, on the other hand, must be handled in the condition in which it comes from the back of the sheep. It may have cockleburs in it. If cotton has cockleburs in it, the burs are picked off. Cotton is taken out of the boll and is cleaned. It is put in a merchantable condition. That is not permitted in the case of wool. I believe there is great similarity between cotton and wool. In fact, I believe they are identical. As I said before, no other agricultural crop is handled in its absolutely raw form. Every one of them has been processed to some extent before it goes to market.

Mr. LANGER and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. It is true, is it not, that in all the Western States—I believe without exception—the farmers have what is known as a wool pool?

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. They send their wool to a central place. Usually there is one such place in each State. Some States have two such places. The wool pool scours the wool before it is offered for sale, and it really is in the raw state.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. The Senator is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Georgia the fact that the line which is proposed to be amended by the Senator from Massachusetts lists several commodities. It refers to the produce of live animals, such as wool, eggs, milk, and cream. Beginning with the last, it is obvious that cream must be separated from the milk. Is that processing? Of course not. It is not so regarded. Take the case of eggs. Is it not a fact that every farmer expects eggs to be washed before they are sent to market? Is anyone to interpret this language as meaning that, for the purposes of this legislation, "eggs" means unwashed eggs? Likewise, how can it be argued that "wool" means unwashed wool?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it not a fact that corn in the crib must be shelled before being loaded into a boxcar?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no doubt about that; but this provision deals with animal products.

Mr. WHERRY. My colleague mentioned wheat. Wheat must be cleaned. It must be harvested. The same argument applies to a great many other agricultural products.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not true that when a producer sells wool in the grease, the weight of the dirt, cockleburrs, sand, and everything else that is in the wool is calculated, and the actual price of the wool in grease is on the basis of scoured wool. Wool in grease varies in price perhaps as much as 5 cents, depending upon whether or not there is excess grease.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is an estimate as to the shrinkage which would result from the process of scouring.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But that is not a manufacturing process. It is merely a cleansing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, has this amendment been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been disposed of. The Chair is advised that 3 minutes remain of the time of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. In the time of the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia just what he agreed to do with respect to this amendment. What was the comforting assurance which he gave to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GEORGE. I stated that I would ask the House conferees if they would include in their statement on the conference report a sentence to justify including scoured wool.

Mr. WHERRY. That is, that such a recommendation be contained in the report of the House conferees?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. That would go into the report of the House conferees. They must make a report to the House, as the Senator from Nebraska well knows. Such a statement would interpret the term.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the Senator does not feel that he could take the amendment to conference with the understanding that the conferees would do the best they could to accomplish the purpose desired.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator——

Mr. WHERRY. I am not going to insist.

Mr. GEORGE. I know that this is a close question. If the Senator can assure me that no effort will be made to strike from the bill the mandatory exemptions of farm and animal products, I will do as he suggests. If the Senator would wait until we are ready to pass the bill, I might be able to get the amendment into conference so that it could be considered.

Mr. WHERRY. I cannot guarantee anything except what the junior Senator from Nebraska will do.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, on the statement which the Senator from Georgia has just made, I temporarily withdraw my amendment and trust that I may be able to obtain recognition prior to the passage of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator for withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, at this time I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment, beginning in line 6 on page 36 and extending through line 17 on the same page, was adopted. I wish to make a few remarks with reference to the amendment which I intend to offer.

It is my intention, should the motion to reconsider be agreed to, to move that the House language beginning with line 19 on page 35 and extending through line 5 on page 36, be restored to the bill, with one exception, namely, that the salary of members of the Renegotiation Board and of the chairman of the Board shall be made as approved by the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no right to speak for the committee as a whole. However, I am prepared to offer, on my own behalf, an amendment if it would be agreeable to the Senator, as follows:

(a) Creation of Board: There is hereby created as an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government a Renegotiation Board, to be composed of five members to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, respectively, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Defense and the Administrator of General Services, shall each recommend to the President for his consideration one person to serve as a member of the Board. The chairman shall receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 per annum, and the other members shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum. The Board shall have a seal which shall be judicially noticed.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this amendment would take the appointment out of the hands of the Secretaries. Under the terms of this amendment they would be given authority only to recommend to the President for his consideration. Of course, I am obliged to say that their recommendations would not be binding upon the Chief Executive. Nor do I think we could make them binding upon the Chief Executive, because I think that would be an invasion of the appointive power residing strictly and solely in the Executive.

Mr. President, I am willing to ask that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered, and to offer this amendment, if it meets with the approval of the Senator from Minnesota. Of course, it would throw the entire subject into conference.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to make one observation with respect to the suggested amendment of the distinguished chairman. It meets pretty much what I have in mind. First of all, I had doubt as to whether or not the language of the committee amendment, as printed, would even meet the test of constitutionality so far as the nominating powers of the President are concerned. That question may be debatable.

I invite attention, in the House language, to the following provision:

No member shall engage in any business, vocation, or employment other than that as a member of the Board.

In view of the salaries which have been suggested by the committee, and which I think are certainly desirable, I believe that we should retain that language. With that language, I would be more than willing to place my support behind the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, and urge its acceptance by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there might be some objections to putting it so broadly. If the Senator means he shall not be actively engaged, very well. He may be a professional man and be engaged in his profession, although he may temporarily——

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would consent to the use of the word "actively."

Mr. GEORGE. Although he may temporarily be in retirement from active duty. But he still is a lawyer, if he happens to be a lawyer.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes. I would say that that qualification is very desirable. That is, that no member shall be actively engaged in any business, vocation, or employment other than that as a member of the Board. If the Senator will accept that addition to his amendment, I think I can withdraw my motion.

Mr. GEORGE. I should be pleased to add that language to the amendment, or we can insert it at the proper place in the amendment. If the Senator will read the sentence to see where it should be inserted, we will carry the matter to conference. Of course, it will be in conference anyway, because the House and Senate are in disagreement on this very important matter. I have an idea that the House Members probably will be pretty stout in insisting on their provision creating the Board.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I may say to the Senator from Georgia that as I now understand the situation it would be necessary for the junior Senator from Minnesota to withdraw his motion to reconsider, and at that time the Senator from Georgia would offer his amendment to include words "No member shall actively engage in any business, vocation, or employment other than as a member of the Board." That language could be incorporated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the proper method of handling the situation would be for the motion to reconsider to be withdrawn, and that the new proposed amendment by the Senator from Georgia, as amended by the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota, be adopted by unanimous consent, if such consent be given.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. If the Senator from Minnesota withdraws his motion to reconsider, will it be agreeable that the words I have suggested be included?

Mr. GEORGE. That would be agreeable. I shall be very glad to take it to conference.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, we might add an additional phrase "actively engaged while serving as such member." But I presume that is the meaning.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is the intent.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the intent. That would be the proper construction probably.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to say further that I have read the portions of the committee amendment on page 38 which deny any procurement officer the right to serve in any capacity for the Board, either in the delegation of powers or in the redelegation, and I wish to commend the committee, particularly the chairman, for that foresight, in view of the testimony which has been given in previous years with respect to renegotiation. So with that, Mr. President, I withdraw my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the situation, the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 36 was agreed to in the first place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment on page 36 was agreed to. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed substitute amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 36, it is proposed to strike out lines 6 through 17, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(a) Creation of Board: There is hereby created, as an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government, a Renegotiation Board to be composed of five members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, respectively, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Defense and the Administrator of General Services, shall each recommend to the President, for his consideration, one person to serve as a member of the board. The chairman shall receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 per annum, and the other members shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum. No member shall actively engage in any business, vocation, or employment other than as a member of the Board. The Board shall have a seal which shall be judicially noticed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment on page 36.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, at this time I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment relating to minimum amounts subject to renegotiation was adopted. The purpose of my motion to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment relating to minimum amounts subject to renegotiation was adopted is to secure the attention and cooperation of the chairman of the Finance Committee to see what the spirit of the committee will be in terms of the conference committee and its report.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am fully in a position to give the Senator a direct and definite statement on that point. On my motion, as a member of the Finance Committee, $300,000 was written in as the ceiling, and I was quite content with that. There was, of course, much argument on preceding days, and finally some suggestion was made that the amount be raised to $500,000, because the matter had, of course, to go to conference. By virtue of the depreciated value of the dollar, we agreed that the amount should be $250,000 or $300,000, which would be almost equivalent to $100,000 at the time we passed the World War II Act. I would not hesitate to say to the Senator that as one member of the conference I would think the amount ought to be $300,000 or $250,000, somewhere in that neighborhood. If the House conferees would agree to that I am sure the Senate conferees would be glad to acquiesce in their agreement. I have no doubt that we can agree on that question when it is fully considered by the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Georgia that, if the motion to reconsider was favorably acted upon, it was my intention to offer an amendment to insert $250,000. As the chairman of the Finance Committee has pointed out, the $100,000 figure in the World War II Renegotiation Act would be equivalent today to about $240,000 or $250,000 in terms of the depreciated value of the dollar. I know the chairman of the Finance Committee is most persuasive—as he has demonstrated this afternoon without a shadow of a doubt—and since I have received his own expression as to what he feels to be an appropriate and adequate figure for the minimum amount subject to renegotiation, I feel that possibly the best way to handle this is to have my comments as a point of record in the Senate debate urging that the figure of $250,000 be the figure finally decided upon by the conference committee.

I desire to point out the importance of this matter. The testimony which was taken during the Eightieth Congress in particular, as set forth in Senate Report No. 440, part 2, Eightieth Congress, second session, indicated quite clearly that substantial sums of money could be reclaimed under negotiation without injury to the business concerns themselves, if a minimum figure, which at that time was $100,000, was incorporated in the legislation. I feel now, in view of the inflation and the rise in the cost of commodities, of labor, and of what we may call other costs of production, that the $250,000 figure would be adequate.

The War Department Price Adjustment Board furnished the committee of the Eightieth Congress a study of the renegotiation of companies in the $100,000 to $500,000 bracket under the 1942 act. Of 3,728 cases in this bracket, 1,631, or 44 percent, were found to have made excessive profits totaling $57,371,000. Even more interesting is a tabulation of a group of 13 companies selected at random, all in the $100,000 to $500,000 bracket during 1943 and therefore not subject to renegotiation. These companies had average profits of 38.1 percent of gross sales. One company's profit was 91 percent of its $152,880 in gross sales.

I should also like to point out that the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Senate Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, in the Eightieth Congress, second session, include the following very straightforward recommendation:

The committee believes that any future Renegotiation Act shall be improved in the following specific ways:

(a) By bringing within its operation all contractors with an annual war business exceeding $100,000.

Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Georgia whether he feels it would fortify his case if we should vote on reconsideration at this time, in order to write into the bill a figure which could be used for his purposes in conference; or would it be advisable for the junior Senator from Minnesota to withdraw his motion to reconsider and place his reliance in what he knows to be the honor and integrity of the chairman of the Finance Committee?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I would unhesitatingly say to the Senator that I think we would come nearer to accomplishing our purpose if the Senator would withdraw his motion to reconsider, and would permit the amendment to remain as it is. I am not at all sure that the House would agree to have this figure raised above $100,000, but I am hopeful that the House would agree to raise it to at least $250,000 or $300,000. Inasmuch as skilled men to handle these matters will be scarce, and, furthermore, in view of the fact that at the prevailing high, inflationary prices of today, only one or two contracts could easily amount to $100,000 or $200,000, I think a limitation of $250,000 or $300,000 would be low enough to protect both the Government and the contractors.

Moreover, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that under the 1942 act a contract for $100,000 or less was thrown out.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not true under the bill now before the Senate.

In short, because of the possibility of the existence of a multiplicity of even small contracts, at the present high prices a contractor may during one fiscal year soon run his account with the Government up to $200,000 or $300,000, if he is doing a large amount of business with the Government.

I think what the Senator from Minnesota has in mind would be better accomplished if he would be disposed to withdraw his motion at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am surely disposed to withdraw my motion to reconsider, in view of the comments which have been made by the chairman of the Finance Committee and in view of what all of us know will be his position and his intention in the confines of the committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota desires to withdraw his motion to reconsider. Unanimous consent is required for that purpose. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an excerpt from Report No. 440, part 2, Eightieth Congress, second session, on page 234.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The administrators of the act also urge that the base for renegotiation be reduced from $500,000 to $100,000. The original act in 1942 applied to all annual business in excess of $100,000 but this was raised in the 1943 act to $500,000 at the request of the Price Adjustment Boards. At that time very slow progress had been made in renegotiation and a vast volume of work was facing the Boards. It was felt that the possible recovery from concerns in the $100,000 to $500,000 bracket would not justify the time and expense of renegotiating them. At that time this committee also recommended the elimination of concerns with less than $500,000 in war business. The committee now feels in view of our wartime experience in the administration of the renegotiation laws that this recommendation was a mistake. It should be noted, however, prior to the passage of the 1943 act, Senator Carl Hatch, then chairman of the Subcommittee on Renegotiation, of this committee, testified before the Senate Committee on Finance that further studies by this subcommittee indicated that the backlog of cases before the Boards was rapidly dwindling and that it might not be desirable to make the change. He pointed out that excessive profits on $100,000 of business were very possible.

The administrators of the act testified that recoveries of excessive profits from contractors in this bracket probably would not be large. The principal reason for this recommendation, they stated, was that in their experience most of the complaints they received about excessive profiteering during the war were directed at contractors with less than $500,000 annual war business. It was damaging to war morale, they thought, to let contractors in this bracket retain excessive profits while neighboring contractors with over $500,000 war business annually were renegotiated. It also frequently happened that contractors about whom complaints were received were located in small communities where it soon became common knowledge that the contractor was profiting excessively.

The War Department Price Adjustment Board furnished the committee a study of the renegotiation of companies in the $100,000 to $500,000 bracket under the 1942 act. Of 3,728 cases in this bracket, 1,631, or 44 percent, were found to have made excessive profits totaling $57,371,000. Even more interesting is a tabulation of a group of 13 companies selected at random, and all in the $100,000 to $500,000 bracket during 1943 and therefore not subject to renegotiation. These companies had average profits of 38.1 percent of gross sales. One company's profits were 91 percent of its $152,880 in gross sales.

Administrators of the act testified that companies in this bracket could be renegotiated with very few more renegotiators and that the cost of renegotiating them would be very small.

There was some indication that the $500,000 limitation also served to discourage some subcontractors from accepting additional war work that would have put their gross business over this amount and subject them to renegotiation. There was also evidence that an attempt to avoid the base limitation was made by some individuals who set up new businesses to take war work that would subject the individual to renegotiation. This was discouraged to a certain extent by the statutory provision and regulations bringing within renegotiation concerns under common control if the gross aggregate business was in excess of $500,000. However, proof of common control was at times hard to establish and no doubt where such common control was not obvious the companies avoided renegotiation.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The committee believes that the renegotiation law, coupled with the excess-profits tax, is more likely to be successful and equitable than any other less flexible method. No more desirable method of reducing war profiteering was suggested to the committee.

2. The renegotiation system should be incorporated in a general industrial mobilization plan ready to be put into operation at once in the event of an emergency.

3. The factors to be considered in determining what is a fair profit in time of war should be set forth more specifically and with greater particularity.

4. In deciding what is a fair profit, the committee feels that any future renegotiation law should emphasize the importance of net worth as a factor in deciding a fair profit for a company during a war. In this way the growth of war millionaires could be prevented or greatly curtailed.

5. The renegotiation agency should be a separate agency, independent from any procurement authority, designed to handle the renegotiation of all services and branches of the Government.

6. The committee believes that any future Renegotiation Act be improved in the following specific ways:

(a) By bringing within its operation all contractors with an annual war business exceeding $100,000.

(b) Including war contracts of all Government agencies.

(c) By eliminating all mandatory and permissive exemptions so that all Government contractors with more than an annual business of $100,000 are renegotiated.

7. The committee recommends the establishment of regional price adjustment boards in each area, in order to eliminate duplication of facilities and services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be proposed?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I now call up and offer again my amendment which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I would agree to waive the reading of the amendment by the clerk; and in line with my statement to the Senator from Massachusetts, I shall be very glad to have the amendment go to conference. That certainly will give the conferees on the part of the House an opportunity to place their interpretation on the bill as it now stands.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the courtesy of the chairman of the committee.

Will the Chair put the question on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment submitted by Mr. SALTONSTALL, for himself and Mr. LODGE, was agreed to, as follows:

On page 29, line 6, after "wool", insert "in the grease or scoured."

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment on page 37, in line 7, was agreed to, be reconsidered. The wording of the amendment is as follows: "(but without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations)."

Mr. President, this Board may appoint thousands upon thousands of employees. We are spending millions of dollars for the Civil Service Commission, and we have working for the Commission many men and women in almost every region of the United States. I do not see any sense in having all these appointments made without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations. Therefore, I move to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement already entered, the Senator who has made the motion has 15 minutes in which to speak, if he desires to use that much time; and the chairman of the Finance Committee has 15 minutes to discuss the motion, if he desires to do so.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senate will not reconsider its vote on this amendment. While the bill does provide that such employees shall not be subject to the civil-service laws, yet it expressly requires them to be under the salary Classification Act.

Of course, it is obvious the Board must obtain competent employees quickly and without delay.

At this time, when manpower may become scarcer and scarcer, it is believed necessary to take this action. I hope the Senate will not agree to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Was it brought out in the hearings with reference to this particular item, by the representatives of the present Renegotiation Board, that in their search for competent help in reference to the technical and very highly classified tasks of renegotiation, they had to go beyond the registers of the Civil Service Commission, and had been compelled to do so even in order to operate the limited Renegotiation Act now on the statute books?

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is correct. As I recall, such evidence was produced before the committee. I know the committee felt it was well advised to give the Board the opportunity to make up its personnel subject to the provisions of the Classification Act, but not subject to the requirements of the civil-service laws and regulations.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, this matter is so important that, in connection with it, I suggest the absence of a quorum, before I speak further in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Byrd	Cordon
Anderson	Cain	Douglas
Bennett	Capehart	Duff
Brewster	Carlson	Dworshak
Bricker	Case	Eastland
Bridges	Chapman	Ecton
Butler, Md.	Clements	Ellender
Butler, Nebr.	Connally	Ferguson

Flanders	Kerr	Neely
Frear	Kilgore	O'Conor
Fulbright	Knowland	O'Mahoney
George	Langer	Pastore
Green	Lehman	Robertson
Hayden	Lodge	Russell
Hendrickson	Long	Saltonstall

Ives	Maybank	Thye
Johnson, Colo.	Millikin	Tobey
Johnson, Tex.	Monroney	Watkins
Johnston, S. C.	Morse	Wherry
Kefauver	Mundt	Wiley
Kem	Murray	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, has my time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield 1 minute to me?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no time to yield. My time has expired.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from North Dakota be allowed to proceed for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is whether, in the appointment of employees, we are to disregard the civil-service laws and regulations. The paragraph I have in mind reads:

> The Board is authorized, subject to the Classification Act of 1949 (but without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations), to employ and fix the compensation of such officers and employees—

In other words, the salary is fixed. If the committee amendment were not adopted, the employees would be taken from the civil-service rolls.

Mr. President, we are spending millions of dollars for civil service. Why should an important Board like this not take its employees from the civil-service list or register? All I am asking is that line 7 be eliminated, which says: "(but without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations)."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate. Testimony before the committee was to the effect that the Board, in order to get the experienced people who were required to do the job imposed on it by the Reorganization Act of 1948, had to go outside the register to get them. It also appeared that in many instances they could get retired businessmen, retired professional men, retired teachers, and others who could not qualify under civil service. At the present time when we need manpower, we thought it would be wise to say, "You need not go to civil service, but you will be limited by the Classification Act as to the salaries to be paid." That is why the committee came to its conclusion. This is a temporary job. It is not a lifetime job. I hope the Senate will not reconsider its vote.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining of my minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send forward a unanimous-consent request which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> I ask unanimous consent that—
>
> (1) The bill be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.
> (2) That in the engrossment of the amendments of the Senate to the bill, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make such changes in section, subsection, paragraph, etc., numbers and letters and cross-references thereto as may be necessary to the proper numbering and lettering of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unanimous-consent request is granted.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference thereon with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BYRD, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, and Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska conferees on the part of the Senate.

ALLEGED BARTER AND SALE OF FEDERAL OFFICES IN MISSISSIPPI

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an Associated Press dispatch from McComb, Miss. It has to do with the barter and sale of Federal jobs in the State of Mississippi. The dispatch reads:

> McCOMB, MISS., February 20.—A Mississippi publisher charged today that several Mississippians offered jobs as county economic stabilization directors were first asked to contribute $300 to $400 to the Truman faction of the State's Democratic Party.
> The charge was made by Publisher J. Oliver Emmerich, a leader in the States' rights movement, in his McComb Enterprise-Journal.
> Emmerich said that a businessman had been asked for a $300 contribution when offered the job as Pike County (McComb) economic stabilization director.
>
> At Washington, it was reported that all district and regional offices now being set up will be under the Office of Price Stabilization instead of the Economic Stabilization Agency.
>
> OPS Director Michael DiSalle said:
> "We are turning this matter over to our enforcement division for investigation. If it is found there is any truth to it we will ask the Justice Department to prepare indictments for submission to a grand jury. Furthermore, if we find any of our own people involved in it, they will be dismissed and prosecuted, if subject to prosecution."

My colleague [Mr. STENNIS] and I desire to explain the matter and its background to the Senate. For a great many months we have been getting reports of the widespread sale of Federal jobs in Mississippi by people in the State who have organized a committee which calls itself the Mississippi Democratic Committee, and which is recognized and affiliated officially with the Democratic National Committee, indeed, it was set up by the Democratic National Committee. It was created by it. It is its agent. It is its instrumentality. It is its official representative in Mississippi. In fact, this committee in Mississippi dispenses all Federal jobs and Federal Government favors in the State.

Judging from repeated reports, this situation has become so bad and so corrupt that my colleague and I have had an investigator at work in the State to secure information on which to base an investigation by the Senate of the deplorable condition which exists there. Several weeks ago we jointly called upon Mr. Howard McGrath, the Attorney General of the United States, and requested an investigation by the FBI of the sale of places under the jurisdiction of the FBI. Mr. McGrath promised his full cooperation and our information is that he has started such an investigation.

Mr. President, we have confidence in Howard McGrath, and we know that he will do his utmost. The FBI has no jurisdiction over the postal service, and we have also gone to the Postmaster General with reports of the sale of postmasterships and places as rural letter carrier in the State. Mr. Donaldson has assured us that he would investigate these matters.

The personnel of the Office of Price Stabilization is currently being set up in the State. Our information is that places as county director for this agency are being sold for a fixed fee of from three to four hundred dollars in each county.

Mr. President, I desire at this time to read an affidavit which I received from Pearl River County, Miss., a county not involved in the newspaper article which I have read to the Senate. The affidavit reads:

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
County of Pearl River:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority in and for the above-mentioned county and State, W. Denny Russ, who stated on oath that he was approached on February 13, 1951, by R. F. Brashier, who gave his address as Brookhaven, Miss., phone 1698, who stated they were looking for a man to set up a ration board in Pearl River County and that he had been directed to see me for the position of supervisor, that I would be directly in charge of all personnel, which would consist of 10 to 12 people, and that my salary would be, as supervisor, the sum of $4,500 per year, but in order to get this appointment, I would have to give him a check in the amount of $400 to be made out to the National Democratic Committee. This was stated by both Brashier and his wife, who was with him, and to convince me that this was on the level and that he had the authority to set up this Board, he produced some four or five checks from different counties, which were made out for the sum of $400 and signed by different people.

I asked Mr. Brashier if this appointment would come from the endorsement of Members of Congress or Senate from Mississippi, and his wife, Mrs. Brashier, informed me that as far as any appointments in the State of Mississippi were concerned that both the Senators, EASTLAND and STENNIS, were through with appointments.

Due to the fact that I did not think his offer was legitimate, I would not accept, and they hurriedly departed.

W. DENNY RUSS.

The affidavit was acknowledged before a notary public.

Mr. President, Mr. Russ is a competent and high class gentleman. I think he made a mistake in the affidavit when he said that the check was to be made out in the name of the National Democratic Committee. I think they said the check was to be made out to the Mississippi Democratic Committee.

But the fact is that the Mississippi Committee was set up by the Democratic National Committee. The Mississippi Committee is the agent in Mississippi of the Democratic National Committee. It is the representative, the instrumentality in the State, of the Democratic National Committee. The group which compose this committee state publicly that they send a part of this money to the Democratic National Committee.

Furthermore, we have received reports from other counties where this has happened. Automobile dealers are being approached and told, "You pay this money and you can control the ration board. You will get benefits over your competitors in the automobile business if you put up $400 for this job. If you do not want it, name the man and we will appoint whomever you name."

Mr. President, here is another affidavit which substantiates what my colleague and I have to say about conditions in the State:

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
County of Jones, First District:

Personally appeared before me, Lonie E. Meador, circuit clerk of the above-named county and State, J. Allen Pickering, of Collins, Miss., who being by me first duly sworn, states on oath that on or about the 25th day of July A. D. 1949 he paid the sum of $150 in cash to H. R. Abercrombie, a merchant of Collins, Miss., who in exchange for the said sum of $150 guaranteed a continuance of the job of said J. Allen Pickering (said job being rural letter carrier from the post office at Collins, Miss.) for a period extending until after the congressional election of 1950.

The said H. R. Abercrombie, at the above-stated time, says Mr. Pickering, stated that he was acting for or was the agent of Curtis Rogers, of Sylverina, Miss., who is one of the Trumanite State committee and who claimed to have Federal patronage in this section.

Mr. Rogers is personnel man for the group which call themselves the Mississippi Democratic Committee.

Continuing the quotation:

Regardless of the above-described agreement or contract between said parties, J. Allen Pickering further states on oath that, after receiving due notice, he was relieved of the said job on March 1, 1950.

J. ALLEN PICKERING.

Sworn to and subscribed before me on this the 25th day of March A. D. 1950.

LONIE E. MEADOR,
Circuit Clerk.
By NELL GRAVES,
District Clerk.

Mr. President, these affidavits were secured as the result of the work done by an investigator whom my colleague and I have had in the State. There has also come to us information as to the sale of places in the Office of Price Stabilization in a number of other counties in addition to the instance in Pike County mentioned in the Associated Press dispatch. We believe that this information is accurate, and we desire to make it available to an investigating committee, which we shall ask be established to investigate thoroughly the situation within the State of Mississippi. It is my judgment that the sale of places in the Office of Price Stabilization is widespread over the State. In recent weeks rumors have reached both Senators from Mississippi that war contractors have been approached by this group attempting to solicit certain sums from them for their influence in the procurement of war contracts.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will not the Senator broaden his request for the investigation so as to include not only the State of Mississippi, but all other States and possessions of the United States?

Mr. EASTLAND. The only State with respect to which we have any proof is the State of Mississippi. We think we have first-hand knowledge of conditions there. We shall request an investigation in that State by a Senate committee. If the Senator from Michigan desires to ask for an investigation to cover the entire country, that is something for the Senate to determine; but we shall ask it for Mississippi.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will not the Senator accept an amendment to include the rest of the country?

Mr. EASTLAND. I would not agree to that. My colleague and I intend to submit a resolution. We shall be very glad to consider the Senator's suggestion. However, it is our intention to submit the resolution with respect to Mississippi, where we have the proof to which I have referred.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan will offer an amendment later.

Mr. EASTLAND. That is the Senator's privilege.

As I have stated, in recent weeks rumors have reached both my colleague and me that war contractors have been approached by this group attempting to solicit certain sums from them for their influence in the procurement of war contracts. However, since this matter is of recent origin we have not been able to tie it down, though we verily believe the reports to be correct.

Another report is that persons indicted for income-tax fraud have been contacted by this group, have received suspended sentences over the protest of the United States attorney, and thereafter emerged as Federal patronage dispensers in their respective areas.

Mr. President, the administration was warned on several occasions of what would happen, what was happening, and what subsequently did happen in Mississippi. They were warned by prominent people both in private life and in the Government. Those warnings were ignored. Why they were ignored in the face of what was happening in the State is beyond my comprehension. The administration has a number of influential and prominent people in the State who are its friends. These people are highly respected and are people of the very highest integrity. My colleague and I have requested that the Federal patronage in the State be handled by these friends of the administration so that there would be no scandal attached to the Democratic administration and in order that no tribute be levied upon veterans and others who desired Federal employment and that there would be no shake down of businessmen and others who desire to cooperate with the Defense Establishment and who would have to do business with these agencies.

The present newspaper publicity has come before the two Senators from Mississippi could finish their investigation of the conditions in the State. We believe that this condition is widespread and that it must be investigated by the Senate. It is our purpose in the near future to submit a resolution to set up a special Senate committee to investigate the sordid aspects of the entire set-up in Mississippi. We desire a special committee, Mr. President, because this is a subject matter with respect to which the Judiciary Committee would have jurisdiction of one aspect, the Finance Committee over another aspect, the Post Office and Civil Service Committee over another, the Armed Services Committee over another and probably the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments over another aspect.

This whole matter is interlocked, and separate investigations by a half dozen Senate committees would be wasteful and inefficient. The people of our State are disgusted and dismayed. They had no idea that they would be turned over as the prey for political free-booters.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I desire to assure the Members of the Senate that I am asking for decent consideration of the people of my State, to protect them from the practices which have been related on the floor of the Senate and which are proceeding now.

When the Economic Controls Act was before the Senate in 1950, I realized it meant that the people of America would be put in an economic strait-jacket, their freedom taken away, and their daily lives controlled. I saw in that bill many opportunities for fraud and corruption. I felt that the main administrators, certainly those at the State level, ought to be confirmed by the Senate so we would have some direct responsibility in connection therewith and some control over the matter. I knew that that control was needed in Mississisippi, because I was already receiving reports about the activities of those who supported and were representing the administration in my State, some of whom had highly questionable reputations. My colleague [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], and I offered an amendment in the Senate requiring confirmation of administrators serving at the State level and above. That amendment was adopted by the Senate. It was lost in conference and did not become a part of the law.

When the Congress returned in November 1950, I spoke to several of those who were high and influential advisers of the administration, and asked them to look into the situation in Mississippi, because I was certain in my mind that when the Economic Stabilization Act was put into effect there would be an attempt to sell jobs and sell alleged war contracts, and other activities in my State. I emphasized to those persons repeatedly that I did not want to have anything to do with naming the administrators, that is, to select them myself.

Soon after Congress convened in January of this year I renewed the same warning to several individuals in the administration, and emphasized again that I did not want to name any of the individuals who were to be appointed. My colleague and I then went together to other members of the group in the administration and explained that we did not want to make the appointments. We warned them of what would happen and suggested the names of two very able and highly respectable Mississipians who had the complete confidence of the administration, and suggested that they at least be consulted in an advisory capacity with reference to the administration of the Economic Controls Act. This suggestion by my colleague and me was ignored.

We have now received reports that numbers of persons in Mississippi are being approached by individuals who claim to have the authority to act under the Economic Controls Act, and are being offered good paying positions for $400 cash on the barrel head. The affidavits mentioned by my colleague and placed in the RECORD speak for themselves.

Mr. President, I anticipated such practices as this by some of those who were advisers to the administration in Mississippi, because for some time I have been receiving reports from various parts of the State that appointments to rural mail routes and to postmasterships were being sold for cash. Members of the House of Representatives from Mississippi have not been consulted by the administration in the selection of such mail carriers and postmasters.

I have no direct proof to substantiate any particular case, but I have information from reliable sources which causes me to believe that veterans who are still carrying wounds from German and Japanese bayonets and who are entitled to these positions under the Veterans' Preference Act, are being hijacked and held up for money in order to secure these positions. Some weeks ago I gave information along this line to Postmaster General Donaldson, a man for whom I have a high regard and who, I am sure, will proceed to investigate such matters. Other violations of law with regard to appointments outside the Post Office Department have also come to my attention.

I have representations from men of the highest integrity that small contractors are being approached by persons in Mississippi who claim to represent the administration and are charging them $200 to get their names on a so-called "eligible list" for Government contracts. I mentioned this matter to some Members of the Senate but have not actually reported it, as I am developing further proof along this line.

Mr. President, these are grave charges, and I can assure the Senate that they are serious to the people of Mississippi. It is not characteristic nor typical of the people of my State to indulge in or to be subjected to such practices in connection with governmental affairs. I assure the people of Mississippi that I have done everything I can to avoid such incidents happening to them, and assure the Members of the Senate that the people of Mississippi highly resent such tactics being employed in connection with their public affairs. Given the proper opportunity, I believe that most of them who have knowledge of these matters will disclose them in the interest of justice and decency, and I encourage them to do so.

Under these circumstances, I make a special request of the Senate for a full-scale investigation of all these matters to be conducted directly by the Senate through a special committee, because the subject matter will be found to be so varied that it will far exceed the jurisdiction of any committee or subcommittee now in existence in the Senate. On my responsibility as a Member of the Senate I give my assurance to each Member that I am satisfied that a full-scale investigation will disclose that rural mail routes and postmasterships in Mississippi are actually being sold for hard money, that small contractors are being made to believe that they have to pay money or they will be on the Government blacklist and not get any Government contracts, and that, because of the unsavory situation, some persons are paying money in expectation of Federal jobs. I believe that a full-scale investigation will show that positions in the economic controls organization are being offered right and left for money consideration. I am not fully informed as to tax matters, but I have sufficient information to cause me to feel that certain income-tax cases in Mississippi should be thoroughly investigated. It is because of these conditions that I shall ask the Senate for full-scale investigations by a special committee.

Mr. President, let me point out that there is now enough uncertainty among the American people without adding scandal to the administration of the war effort or other public affairs. This is not a question of politics. It is a question of decency and honesty in government. I trust that the Senate will see fit to authorize the investigation which will be asked for in the resolution to be submitted soon to the Senate by my colleague and myself.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WILEY. In the Senator's opinion, would it not be advisable, in view of the fact that Federal law is being violated, for the President, who has jurisdiction of the activities of the FBI, issue orders to the FBI to make the investigation? It is not only in Mississippi that such conditions as the Senator describes exist. I know of several instances which have occurred in my State which simply made my blood boil.

Mr. STENNIS. My remarks are confined to facts concerning which I have personal knowledge and direct information. I have confined myself to a statement respecting the State of Mississippi.

DISCREPANCIES IN ACCOUNTS OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on March 25, 1949, I first called to the attention of the Senate the fact that the books of the Commodity Credit Corporation were in a deplorable condition and that the staggering amount of $366,000,000 had not been accounted for. I requested at that time that the Senate Agriculture Committee give this subject its immediate consideration. Following my disclosure, a renewed effort was made to adjust these records, and by June 1950 this item of $366,000,000 had been reduced to $96,440,497. At that time we were advised that this amount was being written off in order to bring the books of the CCC into balance.

I protested that procedure, and on June 6, 1950, when the Commodity Credit Corporation was asking for an additional $2,000,000,000 of borrowing authority, I took the position that the Senate should not authorize any additional funds for this Corporation until such time as it had accounted for all the money it had received. However, the Senate saw fit to override my objections, and took the position that since the $96,000,000 referred to as written off represented transactions which occurred during the war years, it would not be profitable to the Government to persist in reestablishing the old records.

I refused to accept this explanation as final. I am sure the Senate will be interested in knowing that further renewed efforts by the Comptroller General have accounted for an additional $15,266,000, which now reduces the amount unaccounted for from the $96,440,497 referred to in the audit report for the year ended June 30, 1947, as reported to the Senate on June 6, 1950, to $81,174,497. A breakdown of this $15,266,000 is as follows:

Government agencies:
War Department	$10,964,000
Navy Department	2,043,000
Department of Agriculture	736,000
U. S. Commercial Company	426,000
Lend-lease	382,000
Veterans' Administration	221,000
Panama Railroad Company	132,000
War Shipping Administration	80,000
Treasury Department	53,000
War Assets Administration	23,000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	1,000
Total	15,061,000
Less net amount refunded to UNRRA for corrections of billings	1,171,000
Total Government agencies	13,890,000
Other than Government agencies:
Foreign governments	136,000
Commercial (consists of approximately 1,000 items representing claims filed after June 30, 1947, and adjustments of claims, mainly against carriers, warehouses, vendors, and other private corporations and individuals)	1,240,000
Total	15,266,000

The fact that a substantial part of this recovery represents collections from other Government departments means that these departments were also, during the years in question, not keeping accurate records of their own expenditures; otherwise, these discrepancies would have been picked up in their reports.

I reiterate my previous position that Congress is negligent when it allows any Government corporation to continue its operations when it knows that the books of that corporation are in such a deplorable condition. As one Member of the Senate, I shall continue my interest in this Corporation until the remainder of this amount has been fully accounted for or until I can determine who is responsible.

BASIC DATA ON UNITED STATES ENERGY RESOURCES (S. DOC. NO. 8)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, so many requests have been received by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for copies of a monograph which was prepared by its staff entitled "Basic Data Relating to Energy Resources" that I wish to make the announcement that the monograph has now been authorized to be printed by the Senate of the United States as Senate Document No. 8, and will be available presently to all who may care to purchase it from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., for 75 cents a copy. It will be a valuable addition to the library of any person who is interested in promoting the development of this country. The document is the first compilation in a single volume of fundamental, comprehensive, factual information on each of the four major energy sources—coal, oil, gas, and hydroelectric power—upon which the industrial and military might of the people of the United States rests.

A vast amount of information on these great natural resources has been available in many publications, but the material is in such scattered form that practical use of it can be made only by the fuels expert who has the time to make detailed examination of a large number of volumes. The painstaking job of reviewing the mass of material, selecting the important and significant facts, and presenting them in a concise manner in compact form, has been done for the layman in Senate Document No. 8. The more than 200 charts, tables, and maps represent the best judgment of experts in the various energy fields as to what information on each fuel should be brought together as the basis for the energy-resource study being conducted by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The material was compiled by specialists from the Department of the Interior and the Library of Congress, working with the committee staff.

Senate Document No. 8 offers the most comprehensive picture possible, in a volume of this size, of where the Nation stands in terms of energy resources. What they are, who uses them, how fast we are using them, and how much of them we have left, are matters covered in this document. The illustrations and explanatory material deal with all phases of energy consumption by type of fuel and by type of user, the changing patterns of fuel consumption, the rates and trends of production of the various fuels, and the amounts and kinds of fuel imports and exports. Statistics are given showing the nature and extent of the industry facilities, such as coal mines, oil wells, pipelines, and refineries. Other data show the major concerns in the several fuel industries and the division of the markets among them.

Perhaps the most provocative section of the document is the chapter on fuel reserves—those reserves which are the keystone of our entire economy in time of peace, and of our national security in time of war. Estimates by competent authorities are cited for liquid fuels, natural gas, coal and hydroelectric power. Synthetic liquid fuel from coal and oil shale is also discussed.

Other sections of the document deal with financial aspects of the fuel industries, with employment and productivity, and with the technological changes in the discovery, production, and use of each of the fuels.

When the document was issued recently as a committee print, the demand within 24 hours was greater than the supply available to the committee. Again let me say, Mr. President, that this document is now on sale at the Government Printing Office for 75 cents a copy.

The volume is the most complete compendium of basic, fundamental, and comprehensive information with respect to our principal sources of energy, including coal, oil, natural gas, and hydroelectric or water power. I feel that it is important that this notice of the availability of the document in the Government Printing Office should appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that those who read the RECORD and who are interested in obtaining the information may know how the document may be acquired.

SALE OF CHEDDAR CHEESE TO BRITISH GOVERNMENT

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, recently there was released to the press by the Department of Agriculture a notice to the effect that 50,000,000 pounds of Cheddar cheese had been sold to the British Government.

Upon inquiry relative to the price the British paid, I was advised that it was the policy of the Department not to disclose prices of negotiated sales with foreign governments. However, further correspondence has developed the information which I now pass on to the taxpayers, who, after all, are going to pay the bill.

This 50,000,000 pounds of Cheddar cheese cost the Federal Government an average of about 31 cents per pound, or approximately $15,500,000. On October 20, 1950, the 50,000,000 pounds referred to above was sold to the United Kingdom Ministry of Food for 15 cents a pound, or about one-half of its cost, representing a loss of about $7,500,000.

It is of interest to note that during the same period in which this cheese was purchased by the Federal Government, and subsequently was exported out of this country to Great Britain, at a substantial loss—apparently for the purpose of making the price of Cheddar cheese higher to the American housewife—we imported Cheddar cheese from the British Empire in quantities amounting to over 13,000,000 pounds, with 2,470,000 pounds coming from Canada and 10,370,000 pounds coming from New Zealand, at prices ranging from 21 to 37 cents a pound.

To further complicate the case, the importation of this cheese was encouraged under the reciprocal-trade agreements by a 50-percent reduction in tariff rates.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] recently called a similar transaction to the attention of the Senate in relation to our exportation of substantial quantities of butter at 15 cents a pound, while the American housewives are being forced to pay 75 cents.

Unless we discontinue this absurd contradictory policy, by which we find that one Government agency is spending millions of dollars for the sole purpose of deliberately forcing food prices higher, by creating artificial shortages, and, at the same time, another Government agency is set up and staffed with thousands of employees for the sole purpose of holding down these same prices, Washington, instead of being classified as the Capital of the State of Confusion, will find itself as the Capital of Bankruptcy.

As evidence of what this type of program is costing the American taxpayers, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a letter from Mr. F. J. Lawton, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, dated October 11, 1950, in which he points out that the Commodity Credit Corporation, the agency which handles these transactions, has since its inception cost the American taxpayers $3,251,843,466.22. This amount does not include $1,952,544,994 which has been expended by the Department of Agriculture under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act; although that amount has been spent as a subsidy to agriculture, those operations are conducted under separate legislative authority.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., October 11, 1950.

Hon. JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: In answer to a telephone request from your office concerning the operating results of the Commodity Credit Corporation since its inception and through June 30, 1950, the following information is submitted:

OPERATING RESULTS TO JUNE 30, 1950, AND DEFICIT

Net operating loss, exclusive of cost of wartime consumer subsidy program	$1,149,773,595.73
Adjustments for recovery of price support losses:
Charges to the reserve for postwar price support	500,000,000.00
Recovery from Secretary of the Treasury—Public Laws 389 and 393, 80th Cong.	56,239,432.11
Net operating loss after adjustments	593,534,163.62
Cost of wartime consumer subsidy program	2,102,069,870.49
Net restoration of capital from U. S. Treasury	1,897,367,543.78
Net deficit as of June 30, 1950	798,236,490.33

The net operating loss of the Commodity Credit Corporation, including the $2,102,069,870.49 cost of the wartime consumer subsidy program, was $3,251,843,466.22. Of the net operating loss of $1,149,773,595.73, excluding the wartime consumer subsidy program shown above, $705,790,030.36 represents the establishment of reserves for estimated losses on loans, receivables, and inventories as of June 30, 1950. In other words, this amount represents possible future losses rather than realized losses as of that date. Actual realized net losses, exclusive of the wartime consumer subsidy costs, amounted to $443,983,565.37, this amount including both net program losses as well as overhead expenses and interest costs.

In regard to section 32 operations, the funds made available for "Exportation and domestic consumption of agricultural commodities" since enactment of section 32 legislation on August 24, 1935, through the fiscal year 1950 have amounted to $2,241,557,961. Of this total, $1,961,716,479 had been obligated as of June 30, 1950, and $1,952,544,994 had been expended. Of the total obligations, $1,400,631,148 was used for the purposes within section 32, and $561,035,331 represents funds used in accordance with legislative directives other than section 32. The latter include National School Lunch Act (1947, 1948, and 1949), cotton price adjustment program, agricultural conservation program, wartime incentive payments, and pay act purposes in 1947. Of the total funds available to June 30, 1950, the sum of $115,223,849 was returned to the Treasury in the form of unobligated balances. The remainder of the unused balances was either reappropriated or was continued available for obligation after June 30, 1950.

It should be pointed out, we believe, that the Commodity Credit Corporation does not spend section 32 funds, and in tabulations of CCC costs section 32 expenditures should not be included. Section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended (7 U. S. C. 612c), is a separate legislative authority under which a number of different programs are carried out by the Department of Agriculture.

Sincerely yours,

F. J. LAWTON,
Director.

TITLE TO LANDS BENEATH NAVIGALLE WATERS

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and 34 of my colleagues from States spanning the Nation, both inland and coastal, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to establish, confirm and vest in the States title to lands beneath navigable waters within their boundaries. The following Senators are joint sponsors of this measure: Arkansas, Mr. MCCLELLAN; California, Messrs. KNOWLAND and NIXON; Delaware, Mr. FREAR; Florida, Messrs. HOLLAND and SMATHERS; Indiana, Messrs. CAPEHART and JENNER; Iowa, Mr. HICKENLOOPER; Kansas, Messrs. SCHOEPPEL and CARLSON; Louisiana, Messrs. ELLENDER and LONG; Maryland, Messrs. O'CONOR and BUTLER; Massachusetts, Mr. SALTONSTALL; Minnesota, Mr. THYE; Mississippi, Messrs. EASTLAND and STENNIS; Nebraska, Mr. BUTLER; Nevada, Messrs. MCCARRAN and MALONE; New Jersey, Mr. HENDRICKSON; Ohio, Messrs. TAFT and BRICKER; Oregon, Mr. CORDON; Pennsylvania, Messrs. MARTIN and DUFF; South Carolina, Mr. JOHNSTON; South Dakota, Mr. MUNDT; Texas, Messrs. CONNALLY and JOHNSON; Virginia, Messrs. BYRD and ROBERTSON; Washington, Mr. CAIN.

The primary objective of this measure is to preserve and restore unimpaired the fundamental property rights of the several sovereign States, and to prevent further encroachment by the Federal Government upon the rights of the States in this respect.

May I express the view of myself and my colleagues that the time is long overdue that definite and permanent action be taken by the Congress to accomplish this end. There are important reasons, emphasized by current events which are well known to all, why this is imperative. Had such action been taken when such a measure was first presented to the Congress some 5 years ago we would not find ourselves confronted with the problem which now faces us.

Experience has demonstrated and present conditions confirm the fact that the States have shown superior ability in the development and production of petroleum resources. This statement is substantiated by the report of the National Petroleum Council on this question. This national body, composed of outstanding experts in the oil industry, was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to conduct an investigation, to make research, and to formulate "A national oil policy for the United States." In its report, after a thorough review of the entire situation, the Council expressed its studied conclusion and made the following recommendation:

> The petroleum resources of the lands beneath the marginal seas extending to the outer edge of the Continental Shelf can best be explored and developed under State, rather than Federal, control.

In that connection, it went on to say:

> Substantial quantities of oil lie under the seas bordering the shores of several States. They constitute one of the most important sources of additional domestic oil supply remaining to be discovered and developed. A prudent oil policy would require that these resources be discovered and developed as soon as possible.
>
> Years of experience have demonstrated that State laws and regulations, designed to provide the necessary incentives and proper conservation practices, and on-the-ground State administration encourage the risk-taking vital to the discovery and development of petroleum resources. Federal laws and regulations, with final authority far removed from the scene of operations, have tended to discourage exploration for oil underlying Federal lands and to retard its discovery.
> Furthermore, on historic and constitutional grounds and under judicial precedents, the abutting States should own the lands and the resources beneath the marginal sea to the outer edge of the Continental Shelf, inasmuch as any area within or appurtenant to the continental United States is required under our Federal system to be included in one or more States of the Union. A sound national policy should prompt Congress to confirm in such abutting States the ownership of the lands and subsoil beneath such marginal seas.

Despite this definite recommendation, action by Congress resolving this problem has been delayed, with resulting confusion on the part of the oil industry, the States, and the Federal agencies. This confusion was further enhanced by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court on June 5 of last year in the cases brought by the United States against the States of Louisiana and Texas. These decisions had been looked forward to with a considerable degree of expectancy for guidance in the solution of the existing problem. It had been hoped that the Court might correct what many consider an erroneous pronouncement of the law in the California case, which failed to recognize the rights of the States which had prevailed in this Nation for over a century. These rights embraced the ownership of all lands beneath navigable waters within their boundaries. No order and decree effectuating these decisions was entered into until December 11, 1950, so that no legislation was passed during the Eighty-first Congress.

At the opening of the Eighty-second Congress a so-called interim resolution—Senate Joint Resolution 20—was introduced by the senior Senator from Wyoming and the junior Senator from New Mexico. The hearings are now being conducted thereon before the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. These hearings demonstrate the serious confusion and uncertainty that exists, and that, in my opinion at least, the so-called interim measure is entirely inadequate and will not provide the remedy to clear up the situation. It is recognized by all that to effect a permanent solution of the problem Congress can take one of two steps. It must restore to the States their long-asserted rights or must implement the claims of the Federal Government. In the judgment of the introducers of this bill, the one tenable course to be followed is the first named—that is to protect, defend, and restore to the States their long-asserted property rights.

It is the considered opinion of a substantial number of the Members of this body that definite and permanent legislation should be considered and passed without delay. While this bill now presented may not treat every angle of the problems presented, its concept is deemed sound and the basic principles upon which it rests are considered worthy of approval of this body. Whatever additional provisions may be deemed desirable can be readily provided upon a hearing of this measure. It is hoped that such hearing will take place immediately, and we believe it will result in a righteous solution, one of benefit to the entire Nation.

The policy which Congress should follow has been clearly set forth in a report (No. 2078) by the Judiciary Committee of the House dated May 17, 1950, where it was thus expressed.

> We consider it against the public interest for the Federal Government to commence a series of vexatious lawsuits against the sovereign States to recover submerged lands within the boundaries of the States, traditionally looked upon as the property of the States under a century of pronouncements by the Supreme Court reflecting its beliefs that the States owned these lands.

The report also said:

> The committee is of the opinion that not only will the public interest be best served by confirming the rights of the States but that common justice and equity require such action.

As yet, many States, including my own, have not been subjected to any legal action instituted by the Federal Government, challenging the ownership and use of the submerged lands and resources within their boundaries. Who is there to say that many States, interior or coastal, are not subject to being placed in jeopardy by court action brought by Federal agencies in an effort to invoke the same doctrine of so-called paramount rights?

In presenting this bill, my cosponsors and I find ourselves in highly respectable company. This company includes the following Nation-wide organizations whose dignity and patriotism are unchallenged: The Council of State Governments, the Governors' Conference, National Association of Attorneys General, the American Bar Association, National Conference of Mayors, American Association of Port Authorities, National Reclamation Association, National Water Conservation Association, National Institute of Municipal Law Officers (representing 503 cities), and the National Association of Secretaries of State.

Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent to introduce, out of order, the bill which is described in my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 940) to confirm and establish the titles of the States to lands beneath navigable waters within State boundaries and natural resources within such lands and waters and to provide for the use and control of said lands and resources, introduced by Mr. HOLLAND (for himself and other Senators), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

SERVICEMEN'S INDEMNITY ACT OF 1951

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1, the veterans' bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1) to authorize the payment by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of a gratuitous indemnity to survivors of members of the Armed Forces who die in active service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1) to authorize the payment by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of a gratuitous indemnity to survivors of members of the Armed Forces who die in active service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside, until after the reading of Washington's Farewell Address, tomorrow, at which time, if it is agreeable to the majority leader, I shall ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, as I remember, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee expressed the opinion that it would take not more than an hour to dispose of House bill 1, and, inasmuch as it will take but a very short time to dispose of it tomorrow after the reading of Washington's Farewell Address, I think we should do so; after which we can recess until Monday, February 26, thus giving the committees an opportunity to catch up on their important work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CITATION FOR CONTEMPT OF JOSEPH AIUPPA

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, on the calendar are a number of resolutions the purpose of which is to cite witnesses for contempt of the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce. The first is Senate Resolution 66, which I desire to call up at this time. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to consider Senate Resolution 66.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee make a motion or request unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It is a privileged matter, Mr. President. However, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 66) citing Joseph Aiuppa, alias Anton Palunas, alias Joey O'Brien, for contempt of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate certify the report of the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate as to the refusal of Joseph Aiuppa (alias Anton Palunas alias Joey O'Brien) to answer certain questions and his failure to produce certain records in response to subpena duly issued, before the said special committee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, under the seal of the United States Senate, to the United States attorney for the northern district of Ohio, to the end that the said Joseph Aiuppa (alias Anton Palunas alias Joey O'Brien) may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

CITATION FOR CONTEMPT OF JOSEPH DE CARLO, JAMES LICAVOLI, PETER TREMONT, AND DAVID N. KESSEL

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider en bloc Senate Resolution 67, citing Joseph De Carlo, alias "The Wolf," alias Di Carlo; Senate Resolution 68, citing James Licavoli, alias Jack White; Senate Resolution 69, citing Peter Tremont; and Senate Resolution 70, citing David N. Kessel—all for contempt of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolutions were considered and agreed to en bloc, as follows:

Senate Resolution 67

Resolved, That the President of the Senate certify the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate as to the refusal of Joseph De Carlo (alias "The Wolf," alias Di Carlo) to answer certain questions in response to subpena duly issued, before the said special committee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, under the seal of the United States Senate, to the United States attorney for the northern district of Ohio, to the end that the said Joseph De Carlo (alias "The Wolf," alias Di Carlo) may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

Senate Resolution 68

Resolved, That the President of the Senate certify the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate as to the refusal of James Licavoli (alias Jack White) to answer certain questions in response to subpena duly issued, before the said special committee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, under the seal of the United States Senate, to the United States attorney for the northern district of Ohio, to the end that the said James Licavoli (alias Jack White) may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

Senate Resolution 69

Resolved, That the President of the Senate certify the report of the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate as to the refusal of Peter Tremont to answer certain questions in response to subpena duly issued, before the said special committee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, under the seal of the United States Senate, to the United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois, to the end that the said Peter Tremont may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

Senate Resolution 70

Resolved, That the President of the Senate certify the report of the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate as to the refusal of David N. Kessel to answer a series of questions before the said special committee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, under the seal of the United States Senate, to the United States attorney for the northern district of California, to the end that the said David N. Kessel may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

APPREHENSION OF WITNESSES

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 65, for the apprehension of certain persons desired as witnesses before the Special Committee To Investigate Crime in Interstate Commerce.

Mr. McFARLAND. What resolution is it?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Senate Resolution 65, and I might make an explanation in connection with it. In December a resolution was submitted averring that certain witnesses had absented themselves, and that they could not be found for the service of subpenas.

The matter was brought up on the floor of the Senate, and on a voice vote the resolution was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on the Judiciary reported that while, of course, the Senate had the right to issue warrants for the arrest of witnesses who were in hiding, the matter should have been referred to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, in addition to the efforts of the committee's staff to serve subpenas, in order that the committee might have the help of the Sergeant at Arms. Subsequently that was done, and the witnesses for whom warrants of arrest are called for in Senate Resolution 65 were listed, and, in addition to efforts to serve subpenas on them by the staff of the committee, by the police officers, both State and local, where they are located, and by letters posted in registered mail, the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate has been called upon to locate them, and he has reported that he has been unable to do so.

Our committee voted unanimously that we had the duty to use every effort to see that these persons did not thwart the will of the Senate. Senate Resolution 65 complies with the suggestions of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 65?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue warrants commanding the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, or such persons as may be deputized by him, to take into custody the bodies of Rocco Fischetti, Charles Fischetti, Murray L. Humphreys, Jacob Guzik, William G. O'Brien, John Angersola (alias King), Moe Dalitz (alias Davis), Samuel T. Haas, Morris Kleinman, Louis Rothkapf (alias Rhody), Samuel "Gameboy" Miller, Morris "Mushy" Wexler, Samuel Tucker, George Angersola (alias King), John Croft, James Brink, Louis Levinson, and to bring the said persons before the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce at Washington, D. C., or if the said committee be no longer in existence when the arrest is made, before the bar of the Senate or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate, then and there to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry as the said special committee, the Senate itself, or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate;

That, for the purpose of executing warrants issued in accordance with this resolution, the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate may by all-inclusive order or orders deputize all law-enforcement officers of the Federal Government; and

That the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce, the Senate itself, or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate, may discharge any of the persons taken into custody under the authorization of this resolution upon proper assurance by recognizance, or otherwise, that he will appear to give testimony when required to do so. The committee, the Senate, or such appropriate standing committee as the Senate may designate, may require such assurances as it deems necessary, not to exceed $25,000 for any one witness.

For the purpose of discharging any person from custody and ordering assurances, one member of the said committee, or of an appropriately designated standing committee of the Senate, shall be a quorum.

The preamble was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.
